RAILWAYS

The Belgian railway network is one of the densest in the world. The main lines are operated by the S.N.C.B. under lease from the State Railways Administration and the system is complemented by the S.N.C.V. light railway network for local traffic. Five regional companies run trams, rapid transit systems and metros.

BULGARIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The People's Republic of Bulgaria, in the eastern Balkans, is bounded to the north by Romania and to the east by the Black Sea. Turkey and Greece lie to the south and Yugoslavia to the west. The climate is one of fairly sharp contrasts between winter and summer. The official language is Bulgarian, a branch of the Slavonic group, written in the Cyrillic alphabet. Minority languages include Turkish and Macedonian. Most people adhere to the Bulgarian Orthodox Church and there is a substantial minority of Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes of white, green and crimson, with the white uppermost; in the top left-hand corner is the state emblem, surmounted by a five-pointed red star. The capital is Sofia.

Recent History

Formerly a monarchy, Bulgaria allied with Nazi Germany in the Second World War and joined in the occupation of Yugoslavia in 1941. King Boris died in 1943 and was succeeded by his young son, Simeon II. In September 1944 the Fatherland Front, a left-wing alliance formed in 1942, seized power with help from the Soviet Union and set up a government under Kimon Georgiev. In September 1946 the monarchy was abolished by popular referendum and a republic proclaimed. Following elections soon after, Georgi Dimitrov became both Prime Minister and First Secretary of the Communist Party in a government formed from members of the Communist-dominated Fatherland Front. All opposition parties were abolished and a new constitution based on the Soviet model was adopted in December 1947. On his death in 1949, Dimitrov was succeeded by Vassil Kolarov as Prime Minister in the same year and as First Secretary in 1950. Kolarov died in 1950 and was succeeded by Vulko Chervenkov. Political trials and executions became less frequent after the death of Stalin, and rehabilitation of those who had been disgraced began in 1956.

Todor Zhivkov became First Secretary in 1954 and, following an ideological struggle within the Communist Party, succeeded Anton Yugov as Prime Minister in 1962. In 1965 a coup against the Government failed. When a new constitution was adopted in May 1971, Zhivkov relinquished his position as Prime Minister to become the first President of the newly formed State Council. He was re-elected in 1976 and again in 1981. In May 1977 Boris Velchev, a Secretary of the Central Committee since 1959, was dismissed from all his posts within the Party, and in December the Secretariat, and also the Political Bureau, of the Central Committee were reshuffled. In April 1978 three ministers were dismissed, apparently as a result of Bulgaria's disappointing economic performance in the previous year. In July the Secretariat of the Central Committee was further expanded to eight members, and in September a purge of Communist Party membership commenced. The Twelfth Party Congress was held in March and April 1981. The Party leader was restyled

General Secretary. In June, following elections to the National Assembly, a new government was formed, headed by Grisha Filipov. In July there occurred the unexpected death of Lyudmila Zhivkova, daughter of the President, who was Chairman of the Committee for Culture and one of the most ambitious and energetic members of the Party and government.

Relations with Western states have steadily improved and co-operation in economic and technical fields is increasing.

Government

Under the 1971 constitution, the supreme organ of state power is the unicameral National Assembly, with 400 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage in single-member constituencies. The Assembly elects the State Council (28 members were elected in June 1981) to be its permanent organ. There is no constitutional provision for a Head of State, but some of the equivalent functions are exercised by the President of the State Council. The Council of Ministers, the highest organ of state administration, is elected by (and responsible to) the Assembly.

Political power is held by the Bulgarian Communist Party (BCP), which dominates the Fatherland Front. The Front presents an approved list of candidates for elections to all representative bodies (members of the National Assembly were elected unopposed in June 1981). The BCP's highest authority is the Party Congress, convened every five years. The Congress elects a Central Committee (197 members were elected in April 1981) to supervise Party work. To direct its policy, the Committee elects a Political Bureau (Politburo), with eleven full members and three candidate members in 1981.

For local administration, Bulgaria comprises 27 provinces and three cities, each with a People's Council elected for two and a half years. In 1981 the election of local government bodies was brought forward from October to June so as to coincide in future with the elections to the National Assembly.

Defence

Bulgaria is a member of the Warsaw Pact. Military service is for two years in the army and air force, and three years in the navy. The total strength of the armed forces in July 1981 was 149,000, comprising an army of 105,000, air force 34,000 and navy 10,000. Para-military forces include 15,000 border troops and 10,000 security police and there is a voluntary People's Militia of 150,000. The defence budget in 1981 totalled 924 million leva.

Economic Affairs

Bulgaria is a very fertile country and after 1945 agriculture was organized on a large-scale co-operative and mechanized basis. There are about 170 huge agro-industrial complexes. About a quarter of the population is employed on the land, and wheat, maize, beet and barley are the chief crops. Agriculture accounted for 14 per cent of G.N.P. in 1978, and there is a large exportable surplus of processed agricultural products. The food industry is the largest manufacturing sector, accounting for over 20 per cent of total output. Industrial output increased by 55 per cent under the sixth Five-Year Plan (1971-75); the engineering sector, in particular, has been greatly developed, as have the chemical fertilizer and metallurgical industries. During the 1971-75 period, Bulgaria's net material product (N.M.P.) increased by 46 per cent and investment rose by 6.5 per cent each year.

The 1976-80 Five-Year Plan achieved a 35 per cent increase in industrial production, and a 20 per cent increase in agricultural produce, three-quarters of the Plan's budget being spent on further modernization and reconstruction of industry. Foreign trade increased by 80 per cent. However, since 1977 there have been indications of a decline in the growth rate, due mainly to higher prices for raw materials. In 1980 industrial production rose by 5 per cent over 1979, but the increase in agricultural output was below the 7 per cent achieved in 1979, owing to poor weather conditions and organizational weaknesses. The national income went up by 5.7 per cent, and foreign trade by 14.1 per cent.

The draft Five-Year Plan for 1981-85 anticipated a continuation of the slowdown in economic growth, with national income rising by 25-30 per cent. Priority was to be given to the development of heavy industry. Encouragement was also to be given to the fusion of state and co-operative ownership.

Bulgaria produces only 35 per cent of its energy needs, and priority is being given to the full development of indigenous energy resources. Most electrical energy is produced from fuel obtained from local deposits. Bulgaria's first nuclear power station, constructed by Soviet engineers, opened in 1974. Coal, iron ore, copper, lead and zinc are mined and some oil is extracted on the Black Sea coast. Bulgaria became self-sufficient in pig-iron in 1980. Foreign trade is a state monopoly and 80 per cent is with the other CMEA countries, mainly the Soviet Union. In an attempt to increase trade and co-operation with the West, foreign companies have been encouraged since 1980 to set up joint enterprises in Bulgaria. Considerable tourist development has played an important part in alleviating Bulgaria's shortage of foreign exchange.

Transport and Communications

Inland transport is by rail, road and waterway. There are 7,626 km. of railway track and 36,467 km. of roads; a major motorway has been constructed from Sofia to the coast. The Danube is the main waterway. External services link Black Sea ports to the U.S.S.R., the Mediterranean and West Europe. Balkan, the state airline, maintains services to most European capitals and to the Middle East.

In 1981-85 priority was to be given to the development of rail transport.

Social Welfare

State social insurance is directed by the Department of Public Insurance and the Pensions Directorate. In 1980,

2,682 million leva of the state budget was allotted to social insurance and welfare. Workers are paid compensation during sick leave. Women are entitled to full paid leave before and after childbirth. All pensions are non-contributory. Retirement pensions consist of a basic sum plus up to 12 per cent allowance for additional service, over the minimum requirement. The basic pension is related to the average monthly pay in three of the last 15 years of service. Retirement age varies from 45 to 60, depending on the job. Women retire five years earlier than men.

Since 1951 all medical services and treatment have been provided free for the whole population. In 1976 there were 76,107 hospital beds and 19,312 physicians. All medical treatment establishments and medical schools, training colleges and research institutes are controlled by the Ministry of Public Health. Departments of Public Health in the Regional People's Councils supervise medical work together with the Bulgarian Red Cross.

Education

Education in Bulgaria is free and compulsory between the ages of seven and 16 years. It is administered by the Bulgarian Ministry of Education, although direct organization of kindergartens and schools is exercised by specialized organs of the people's councils. Expenditure on education was expected to total 1,311 million leva in 1980.

Kindergartens are attended by 76 per cent of all children between the ages of three and seven. The compulsory eight-class schools provide a general education at primary and secondary levels and prepare students for graduation to higher institutions. Most students graduating from the eighth class proceed to some form of higher education.

There are three types of school after basic school. The gimnazia provides a general education and completes the third stage of the "eleven-year school", the tekhnikum is a vocational school offering a general curriculum together with a course leading to vocational qualifications in various branches of industry, agriculture, etc. The third type of secondary school is the profesionalno tehnikeshko uchilishte (vocational technical school), which gives theoretical knowledge on a certain vocation with practical work in the appropriate enterprises and plants and in agriculture. About 80 per cent of the students who have completed their education at the elementary school continue their studies at tekhnikum (technical schools) and the vocational technical schools.

Higher education in Bulgaria can be divided into two main categories, Poluvishshi instituti and Visshi uchebni zavedeniya. Poluvishshi instituti train teachers for elementary schools and some other specialists. The course lasts two to three years. Visshi uchebni zavedeniya are establishments of higher education, at which about 85,000 students were taking university courses in 1981.

Tourism

Black Sea resorts are very popular, visitors coming from the Soviet Union and East Europe. A campaign to attract visitors from the West greatly increased the number of tourists. In 1980 Bulgaria received about 5.5 million visitors (including 2.6 million in transit).

Public Holidays

1982: May 1st, 2nd (Labour Days), May 24th (Education Day), September 9th, 10th (National Days), November 7th (Anniversary of Russia's October Revolution).

1983: January 1st (New Year).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 stotinki = 1 lev.

Exchange rates (October 1981):

£1 sterling = 1.59 leva;

U.S. $1 = 85 stotinki.

THE CONSTITUTION

Bulgaria was formerly a monarchy, but on September 15th, 1946, King Simeon was deposed and Bulgaria was declared a Republic. The Constitution of 1947 was replaced by a new Constitution adopted by a referendum held on May 16th, 1971, and proclaimed by the Fifth National Assembly on May 18th. The following are its salient features:

The People's Republic of Bulgaria is a socialist state of the working people of towns and villages, headed by the working class. The Bulgarian Communist Party is the leading force in society and in the State. It guides the construction of a developed socialist society in the country in close fraternal co-operation with the Bulgarian Agrarian Union.

The State serves the people. It defends their interests and socialist acquisitions; directs the country's socio-economic development according to a plan; creates conditions for the constant improvement of the welfare, education and health services of the people, as well as for the all-round development of science and culture; ensures the free development of man, guarantees his rights and protects his dignity; organizes the defence of national independence, state sovereignty and the country's territorial integrity; develops and consolidates the friendship, co-operation and mutual assistance with the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics and the other socialist countries; conducts a policy of peace and understanding with all countries and peoples.

In the People's Republic of Bulgaria all power comes from the people and belongs to the people. It is realized by the people through the freely elected representative organs—the National Assembly and the People's Councils—or directly. The representative organs are elected on the basis of a general, equal and direct right to vote by secret ballot.

All the citizens of the People's Republic of Bulgaria who are 18 years of age, irrespective of sex, nationality, race, religion, education, profession, official, public or property status, excluding those under restraint, are eligible to vote and to be elected.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria is governed strictly in accordance with the Constitution and the country's laws. It belongs to the world socialist community, which is one of the main conditions for its independence and all-round development.

SOCIAL-ECONOMIC ORGANIZATION

The economic system of the People's Republic of Bulgaria is socialist. It is based on public ownership of the means of production.

The forms of ownership are: state (all people's) ownership, co-operative ownership, ownership of public organizations, and personal ownership.

Plants and factories, banks, underground resources, the natural sources of power, nuclear energy, forests, pasture and, roads, railway, water and air transport, posts, telegraphs, telephones, the radio and television are state (all people's) property.

Co-operative property belongs to collective bodies of working people who have united of their own free will or the joint carrying out of economic activity, to co-operative unions and inter-co-operative organizations. The State fosters and aids the activity of co-operatives and of co-operative farms.

The property of public organizations serves for achieving their goals, including the realization of the activities entrusted to them by state organs, and for meeting public interests.

The citizens of the People's Republic of Bulgaria have the right of personal ownership on real and movable property to meet personal needs and those of the family. The State protects the personal property, including savings, acquired by work or in some other lawful manner. Citizens cannot exercise their rights of personal ownership and their other property rights to the detriment of the public interest. The right to inherit is recognized and guaranteed.

The State directs the national economy and the other spheres of public life on the basis of unified plans for social-economic development.

Foreign trade is the exclusive right of the State.

Labour is a fundamental social-economic factor. The socialist principle "From everyone according to his abilities, to everyone according to his work" is applied in the People's Republic of Bulgaria. The protection of labour is dealt with by the law.

GOVERNMENT

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly is the supreme representative organ which expresses the will of the people and their sovereignty. As a supreme organ of state power it combines the legislative and executive activities of the State and exercises supreme control. The term of its mandate is 5 years. It is composed of 400 people's representatives who are elected in constituencies with an equal number of inhabitants. The people's representatives are responsible and account to their electorate. They may be recalled before the expiry of the term for which they have been elected. Their recall is effected by decision of the electorate in a manner laid down by law. It is convened to sessions by the State Council at least three times a year.

The National Assembly is the only legislative organ of the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the supreme organizer of the planned management of social development. It realizes the supreme leadership of the home and foreign policy of the State; approves and amends the Constitution; determines which questions and in what manner should be decided by referendum; passes, amends and revokes laws; passes the unified plans for the social-economic development of the country and the reports for their fulfilment and the State budget and the report of the Government for its realization the preceding year; establishes taxes and fixes their rate; grants amnesty; decides the questions of declaring war and concluding peace; appoints and relieves of his duties the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces; may set up state-public organs with the status of ministries; elects and relieves of their duties the State Council, the Council of Ministers, the Supreme Court and the Chief Prosecutor of the People's Republic; passes laws, decisions, declarations and appeals.

Legislative initiative belongs to the State Council, the Council of Ministers, the permanent commissions of the National Assembly, the people's representatives, the Supreme Court and the Chief Prosecutor. The right of legislative initiative belongs also to public organizations in the person of the National Council of the Fatherland Front, the Central Council of Bulgarian Trade Unions, the Central Committee of the Dimitrov Young Communist League and the Executive Council of the Central Co-operative Council on questions referring to their activity.

THE STATE COUNCIL

The State Council of the People's Republic of Bulgaria is a supreme permanent organ of state power which unites the taking of decisions with their realization. Being a supreme organ of the National Assembly, the State Council ensures the blending of legislative with executive activities. It is responsible for all its activities and reports on them to the National Assembly. At its first session the National Assembly elects a State Council from among the people's representatives by a majority of more than half the total number of deputies.

The powers of the State Council are in force until the newly elected National Assembly elects a State Council.

The State Council realizes the general leadership of the home and foreign policy of the State. It represents the People's Republic of Bulgaria in her international relations. The President of the State Council receives the credentials and letters of recall of foreign diplomatic representatives in the country.

The State Council appoints elections for a National Assembly and for people's councils; determines the date for holding a referendum when a decision has been passed by the National Assembly that a referendum should take place on a certain question and in a certain manner; convenes the National Assembly at sessions; issues decrees and other juridical acts on the basic questions arising from the laws and the decisions of the National Assembly; issues decrees also on questions of principle; in urgent cases by decree amends or amplifies individual provisions of the laws; carries out the general guidance of the country's defence and security; appoints and relieves of their duties the members of the State Defence Committee and of the supreme commanding staff of the Armed Forces; controls the activities of the Council of Ministers and of the heads of the Ministries and of the other Departments; at the proposal of the Chairman of the Council of Ministers relieves of their duties and appoints individual members of the Council of Ministers—it is the duty of the State Council to submit this decision to be approved at the next session of the National Assembly; issues decrees and passes decisions, appeals and declarations.

THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The Council of Ministers (the Government) is a supreme executive and administrative organ of the State Power. The Council effects its activities under the leadership and control of the National Assembly, and—when the latter is not in session—under the leadership and control of the State Council.

The Council of Ministers is responsible for the conducting of the internal and external policy of the State. It exercises the right of legislative initiative and secures conditions for carrying through the rights and freedoms of citizens. It also ensures public order and the country's security. It is responsible for the general leadership of the Armed Forces and concludes international agreements. It directly guides, co-ordinates and controls the activities of the ministries and other departments. The Council organizes both the implementation of the acts of the National Assembly, and of the State Council. It guides and controls the activities of the executive committees of the people's councils. It adopts decrees, instructions and decisions.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The territory of the Republic is divided for administrative purposes into Municipalities and Counties, which are governed by Municipal and County People's Councils, electd by the local population for a period of two and a half years. Their function is to implement all economic, social and cultural undertakings of local significance in conformity with the laws of the country. They prepare the economic plan and budget of the Municipality and the County within the framework of the State Economic Plan and the State Budget, and direct its execution. They are responsible for the correct administration of State property and economic enterprises in their areas, and for the maintenance of law and order. These councils report at least once a year to their electors on their activities.

JUSTICE

The judicial authorities apply the law. Justice is independent and subject only to the law. Lay judges (Assessors) also take part in the dispensation of justice. Judges of all ranks and assessors are elected except in special cases fixed by law. Supreme judicial control over every kind of court is exercised by the Supreme Court of the People's Republic, which is elected by the National Assembly for a term of five years.

Citizens whose rights have been violated by government organs may appeal against such violations before higher-ranking organs and courts, in accordance with the Law of Administrative Procedure, 1970.

The Chief Prosecutor, who is also elected by the National Assembly for five years, and is answerable to it alone, has supreme supervision over the correct observance of the law by Government organs, officials, and all citizens. It is his particular duty to attend to the prosecution and punishment of crimes which are detrimental to the national and economic interests of the Republic or affect its independence.

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF CITIZENS

All citizens are equal before the law. No privileges or restrictions in rights based on nationality, origin, religion, sex, race, education or property are recognized. All preaching of racial, national or religious hatred is punishable by law.

Women have equal rights with men in all spheres, including equal pay for equal work. The State pays special attention to the needs of mothers and children. Marriage and the family are under State protection, although only civil marriage is legally valid. Children born out of wedlock have equal rights with legitimate offspring.

All citizens have the right to free medical treatment in hospitals.

Labour is recognized as the basic factor of public and economic life. All citizens have the right to work, and it is their duty to engage in socially useful labour, according to their abilities. Holidays, limited working hours, pensions and medical treatment are guaranteed.

All citizens have the right to free education, which is secular and democratic. Elementary education is compulsory. National minorities have the right to be educated in their own tongue, and to develop their national culture, although the study of Bulgarian is compulsory.

The Church is separate from the State. Citizens have freedom of religion and conscience. However, misuse of the Church and religion for political ends and the formation of religious organizations with a political basis is prohibited.

Citizens are guaranteed freedom of speech and of the Press, secrecy of correspondence, inviolability of persons and dwellings, and the right of meetings and rallies.

Military service is compulsory for all male citizens.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Justice in the People's Republic of Bulgaria is administered by the district, regional and military courts and by the Supreme Court. All labour disputes are considered by the conciliation committees of the enterprises and by the regional courts. Civil law disputes among state enterprises, offices and co-operative and public organizations are heard by the State Court of Arbitration, and disputes connected with international trade by the Foreign Trade Court of Arbitration at the Bulgarian Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

The district court judges and assessors are elected by the district people's councils for a term of five years. Judges and assessors of the Supreme Court are elected for a term of five years by the National Assembly. Judicial control over the activities of all courts is exercised by the Supreme

THE PRESS

As in most Communist countries, the press in Bulgaria is considered a powerful instrument of the Party and part of the educational system, and for that reason it is subject to strict control by the Government. It is largely dominated by the Communist Party and by organizations attached to the Fatherland Front, and much of its news originates from TASS, the Soviet news agency. Censorship is not usually necessary, since editors are Party members and aware of their responsibility to the Government.

There are 13 daily papers in Bulgaria, eight of which are published in Sofia, and their total circulation was 5,496,670 copies in 1978. The most important is Rabotnichesko Delo (circ. 850,000), the organ of the Communist Party. Other important newspapers are Otechestven Front (circ. 280,000), the Fatherland Front daily, and Narodna Mladezh (circ. 250,000), the youth newspaper.

members. Men between the ages of 18 and 50 are liable to 26 months' conscription. In July 1981 it comprised an army of 8,000, mainly composed of Cypriot conscripts, but with some seconded Greek Army officers and NCOs. There is also a Greek Cypriot paramilitary force of 3,000 armed police. The Turkish community has a security force of about 4,500 men, supported by a detachment of the Turkish army, estimated at 20,000 men in July 1981. Cyprus also contains the UN Peace-Keeping force of 2,347 (August 1981) and the British military bases at Akrotiri and Dhekelia.

Economic Affairs

The Cypriot economy was gravely affected by the events of 1974. However, despite the loss of a large proportion of the island's citrus fruit groves, factories, tourist facilities and the main port of Famagusta, the southern economy made a remarkable recovery until 1980, when it was clear that the boom was over. The northern economy remains severely disrupted and the "TFSC" relies heavily on aid from Turkey, amounting to some 500 million Turkish liras in 1980/81.

The economy is basically agricultural, the main crops being potatoes and citrus fruit. Before the economic disasters of 1974, agriculture employed 35 per cent of the working population (1972) and provided 49 per cent of exports (1973). Industry was growing rapidly but mining, mainly for copper, had been in decline for some years. A large trade deficit was covered by income from tourism, foreign military expenditure and remittances from Cypriot expatriates.

Although citrus and cereal production in the southern half of the island has remained low because of reduced areas of cultivation, other fruits and vegetables, particularly potatoes, have been markedly expanded. Construction was boosted by the need to rehouse refugees and to re-establish the tourist industry, while manufacturing and trade recovered strongly and by 1979 were contributing 38.8 per cent of G.D.P., against 28 per cent in 1974. The restructuring of industry created a large demand for imports and the trade deficit, which was C£60 million in 1976, reached a record C£236 million in 1980, largely due to an enormous increase in the value of petroleum imports. There was a 4.3 per cent increase in G.D.P., compared with a 7.5 per cent rise in 1979. Unemployment has grown, but from only 1.8 per cent in 1979 to 2.1 per cent in 1980. Inflation has risen from 4 per cent in 1976-77 to 13.4 per cent in 1980.

In the Turkish-controlled north, emphasis has been laid on restoring the production and export of citrus fruit from damaged groves, relying on seasonal labour from the Turkish mainland, and on improving the communications network. Inflation, running at around 60 per cent in 1980, has caused widespread and damaging strikes.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways in Cyprus. Towns and villages are linked by asphalted roads with frequent bus services. The main ports are Limassol and Larnaca, which provide cargo and passenger services to Greek and other Mediterranean ports. Famagusta used to be the most important harbour but, since its capture by the Turkish army in 1974, the port has been officially declared closed to international traffic. The international airport at Nicosia was closed in July 1974 and a new airport was constructed at Larnaca by the Greek Cypriots. In 1975 the Turkish authorities opened Ercan (formerly Tymbou) airport. In 1977 a hydrofoil service was started between Kyrenia and Mersin on the Turkish mainland.

Social Welfare

A comprehensive social insurance scheme covering every working male and female and their dependants is in operation. It includes protection against arbitrary and unjustified dismissal, industrial welfare, and tripartite co-operation in the formulation and implementation of labour policies and objectives. Benefits and pensions from the social insurance scheme cover unemployment, sickness, maternity, widows, orphans, injury at work, old age and death. An improved scheme, involving income-related contributions and benefits, was to be introduced in October 1980.

Education

Greek Cypriot education, originally under the control of the Greek communal chamber, is now organized by the Ministry of Education. Elementary education is free and compulsory for six years between the ages of six and 14. The first three years of public secondary education are free, and fees are paid for the rest, although senior pupils can be wholly or partially exempt from payment. Secondary education is provided by trade schools, technical schools, the Gymnasium-Lykeion (classics, science and economics), the Agricultural Gymnasium and a new type of upper secondary school, the Upper School of Options (Lykeion Epilogis Mathemation), which was introduced in 1977. Higher education for teachers, engineers, foresters, nurses and health inspectors is provided by technical and vocational colleges.

A similar system was maintained for Turkish Cypriots by the Turkish Education Office. The "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" controls education in the Turkish area.

Tourism

Before the coup and Turkish intervention in July 1974, tourism was developing at a rapid rate. In 1973 nearly 265,000 tourists visited Cyprus. The tourist industry was severely disrupted by the invasion and in 1975 the number of tourists fell to 47,000. Revenue from tourism fell from C£24 million in 1973 to C£14 million in 1974, and to C£5.4 million in 1976. However, the Government has made great efforts to restore the tourist industry and by 1980 tourist earnings were C£70.5 million and there were 353,375 foreign visitors.

STATISTICAL SURVEY

Note: The figures in this survey have been provided by the Department of Statistics and Research at the Ministry of Finance in Nicosia. Since July 1974 the northern part of Cyprus has been under Turkish control, so some of the statistics relating to subsequent periods may not cover the whole island. Some separate figures for the "TFSC" are given on page 500-1.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution entered into force on August 16th, 1960, on which date Cyprus became an independent republic. In March 1961 Cyprus was accepted as a member of the Commonwealth.

ARTICLE 1

The State of Cyprus is an independent and sovereign Republic with a presidential regime, the President being Greek and the Vice-President being Turkish, elected by the Greek and the Turkish Communities of Cyprus respectively as hereinafter in this Constitution provided.

ARTICLES 2-5

The Greek Community comprises all citizens of the Republic who are of Greek origin and whose mother tongue is Greek or who share the Greek cultural traditions or who are members of the Greek Orthodox Church.

The Turkish Community comprises all citizens of the Republic who are of Turkish origin and whose mother tongue is Turkish or who share the Turkish cultural traditions or who are Moslems.

Citizens of the Republic who do not come within the above provisions shall, within three months of the date of the coming into operation of this Constitution, opt to belong to either the Greek or the Turkish Community as individuals, but, if they belong to a religious group, shall opt as a religious group and upon such option they shall be deemed to be members of such Community.

The official languages of the Republic are Greek and Turkish.

The Republic shall have its own flag of neutral design and colour, chosen jointly by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic.

The Greek and the Turkish Communities shall have the right to celebrate respectively the Greek and the Turkish national holidays.

ARTICLES 6-35

Fundamental Rights and Liberties

ARTICLES 36-53

President and Vice-President

The President of the Republic as Head of the State represents the Republic in all its official functions; signs the credentials of diplomatic envoys and receives the credentials of foreign diplomatic envoys; signs the credentials of delegates for the negotiation of international treaties, conventions or other agreements; signs the letter relating to the transmission of the instruments of ratification of any international treaties, conventions or agreements; confers the honours of the Republic.

The Vice-President of the Republic as Vice-Head of the State has the right to be present at all official functions; at the presentation of the credentials of foreign diplomatic envoys; to recommend to the President the conferment of honours on members of the Turkish Community which recommendation the President shall accept unless there are grave reasons to the contrary. The honours so conferred will be presented to the recipient by the Vice-President if he so desires.

The election of the President and the Vice-President of the Republic shall be direct, by universal suffrage and secret ballot, and shall, except in the case of a by-election, take place on the same day but separately.

The office of the President and of the Vice-President shall be incompatible with that of a Minister or of a Representative or of a member of a Communal Chamber or of a member of any municipal council including a Mayor or of a member of the armed or security forces of the Republic or with a public or municipal office.

The President and Vice-President of the Republic are invested by the House of Representatives.

The President and the Vice-President shall hold office for a period of five years.

The Executive power is ensured by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic.

The President and the Vice-President of the Republic in order to ensure the executive power shall have a Council of Ministers composed of seven Greek Ministers and three Turkish Ministers. The Ministers shall be designated respectively by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic who shall appoint them by an instrument signed by them both.

The decisions of the Council of Ministers shall be taken by an absolute majority and shall, unless the right of final veto or return is exercised by the President or the Vice-President of the Republic or both, be promulgated immediately by them.

The executive power exercised by the President and the Vice-President of the Republic conjointly consists of:

- Determining the design and colour of the flag.
- Creation or establishment of honours.
- Appointment of the members of the Council of Ministers.
- Promulgation by publication of the decisions of the Council of Ministers.
- Promulgation by publication of any law or decision passed by the House of Representatives.
- Appointments and termination of appointments as in Articles provided.
- Institution of compulsory military service.
- Reduction or increase of the security forces.
- Exercise of the prerogative of mercy in capital cases.
- Remission, suspension and commutation of sentences.
- Right of references to the Supreme Constitutional Court and publication of Court decisions.
- Address of messages to the House of Representatives.

The executive power exercised by the President consists of:

- Designation and termination of appointment of Greek Ministers.
- Convening and presiding of the meetings of the Council of Ministers.
- Right of final veto on Council decisions and on laws or decisions of the House of Representatives concerning foreign affairs, defence or security.
- Right of recourse to the Supreme Constitutional Court.
- Publication of the communal laws and decisions of the Greek Communal Chamber.
- Prerogative of mercy in capital cases.
- Addressing messages to the House of Representatives.

The executive power exercised by the Vice-President consists of:

- Designation and termination of appointment of Turkish Ministers.
- Asking the President for the convening of the Council of Ministers and being present and taking part in the discussions.
- Right of final veto on Council decisions and on laws or decisions of the House of Representatives concerning foreign affairs, defence or security.
- Right of recourse to the Supreme Constitutional Court.
- Publication of the communal laws and decisions of the Turkish Communal Chamber.
- Prerogative of mercy in capital cases.
- Addressing messages to the House of Representatives.

ARTICLES 54-60

Council of Ministers

The Council of Ministers shall exercise executive power in all matters, other than those which are within the competence of a Communal Chamber, including the following:

- General direction and control of the government of the Republic and the direction of general policy.
- Foreign affairs, defence and security.
- Co-ordination and supervision of all public services.
- Supervision and disposition of property belonging to the Republic.
- Consideration of Bills to be introduced to the House of Representatives by a Minister.
- Making of any order or regulation for the carrying into effect of any law as provided by such law.
- Consideration of the Budget of the Republic to be introduced to the House of Representatives.

ARTICLES 61-85

House of Representatives

The legislative power of the Republic shall be exercised by the House of Representatives in all matters except those expressly reserved to the Communal Chambers.

The number of Representatives shall be fifty:

Provided that such number may be altered by a resolution of the House of Representatives carried by a majority comprising two-thirds of the Representatives elected by the Greek Community and two-thirds of the Representatives elected by the Turkish Community.

Out of the number of Representatives 70 per cent shall be elected by the Greek Community and 30 per cent by the Turkish Community separately from amongst their members respectively, and, in the case of a contested election, by universal suffrage and by direct and secret ballot held on the same day.

The term of office of the House of Representatives shall be for a period of five years.

The President of the House of Representatives shall be a Greek, and shall be elected by the Representatives elected by the Greek Community, and the Vice-President shall be a Turk and shall be elected by the Representatives elected by the Turkish Community.

ARTICLES 86-111

Communal Chambers

The Greek and the Turkish Communities respectively shall elect from amongst their own members a Communal Chamber.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Supreme Court: Nicosia.

President: Hon. Mr. Justice M. A. TRIANTAFYLIDES.

Judges: Hon. Mr. Justice L. N. LOIZOU, Hon. Mr. Justice T. HADJIANASTASSIOU, Hon. Mr. Justice A. N. LOIZOU, Hon. Mr. Justice Y. CH. MALACHTOU, Hon. Mr. Justice D. GR. DEMETRIADES, Hon. Mr. Justice L. G. SAVVIDES.

The Constitution of 1960 provided for a separate Supreme Constitutional Court and High Court but in 1964, in view of the resignation of their neutral Presidents, these were amalgamated to form a single Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court is the final appellate court in the Republic and the final adjudicator in matters of constitutional and administrative law, including recourses on conflict of competence between state organs on questions of the constitutionality of laws, etc. It deals with appeals from Assize Courts and District Courts as well as from the decisions of its own single judges when exercising original jurisdiction in certain matters such as prerogative orders of habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari, etc., and in admiralty and certain matrimonial causes.

Assize Courts and District Courts:

As required by the Constitution a law was passed in 1960 providing for the establishment, jurisdiction and powers of courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, i.e. of six District Courts and six Assize Courts.

Ecclesiastical Courts:

There are seven Orthodox Church tribunals having exclusive jurisdiction in matrimonial causes between members of the Greek Orthodox Church. Appeals go from these tribunals to the appellate tribunal of the Church.

Supreme Council of Judicature: Nicosia.

The Supreme Council of Judicature is composed of the Attorney-General, the President and Judges of the Supreme Court.

It is responsible for the appointment, promotion, transfer, etc., of the judges exercising civil and criminal jurisdiction in the District Courts and the Assize Courts.

"TURKISH FEDERATED STATE OF CYPRUS"

The Turkish intervention in Cyprus in July 1974 saw the establishment of a separate area in northern Cyprus under the control of the Autonomous Turkish Cypriot Administration with a Council of Ministers, and separate judicial, financial, military and educational machinery serving the Turkish community.

On February 13th, 1975, the Turkish-occupied zone of Cyprus was declared the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" and Rauf Denktaş elected President. At the second joint meeting held by the Executive Council and Legislative Assembly of the Autonomous Turkish Cypriot Administration it was decided to set up a Constituent Assembly which would prepare a Constitution for the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" within 45 days. This constitution, which was approved by the Turkish Cypriot population in a referendum held on June 8th, 1975, is regarded by the Turkish Cypriots as a first step towards a federal republic of Cyprus. The main provisions of the constitution are summarized below.

The "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" is a democratic, secular republic based on the principles of social justice and the rule of law. It shall exercise only those functions which fall outside the powers and functions expressly given to the [proposed] Federal Republic of Cyprus. Necessary amendments shall be made to the constitution of the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" when the constitution of the Federal Republic comes into force. The official language is Turkish.

Legislative power is vested in a Legislative Assembly, composed of 40 deputies, elected by universal suffrage for a period of five years.

The President is Head of State and is elected by universal suffrage for a period of five years. No person may be elected President for more than two consecutive terms.

The Council of Ministers shall be composed of a Prime Minister and 10 Ministers.

Judicial power is exercised through independent courts.

Other provisions cover such matters as the rehabilitation of refugees, property rights outside the "Turkish Federated State", protection of coasts, social insurance, the rights and duties of citizens, etc.

The "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" has neither sought nor received international recognition as an independent state, and in March 1975 the UN Security Council adopted a resolution regretting its creation.

Judges: Hon. Justices ŞAKİR SİDKİ İLKAY, SALİH DAYIOĞLU, ERGİN SALÂHI, NİYAZI F. KORKUT, AZİZ ALTAY.

In the areas governed by the "Turkish Federated State of Cyprus" the Supreme Court exercises the powers vested in the Supreme Council of Judicature and the Supreme Court by the 1960 Constitution. It is the final appellate court dealing with appeals from Assize and District Courts and from the decisions of its own judges when exercising original jurisdiction. It is the final adjudicator in matters of constitutional and administrative law.

Assize Courts and District Courts:

The courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, established by the law of 1960, amended by the Constitution of the "Turkish Federated State"

Turkish Communal Courts:

Civil disputes relating to the personal status of members of the Turkish community are dealt with by two Communal Courts. There is also a communal appellate court to which appeals may be made from the courts of first instance.

TRADE FAIRS

Cyprus International (State) Fair: P.O.B. 3551, Nicosia; seventh scheduled for May 22nd–June 6th, 1982.

TRANSPORT

There are no railways in Cyprus.

ROADS

In 1978 there were 9,817 kilometres of roads, of which 4,763 kilometres were paved and 5,054 kilometres were earth or gravel roads. Bus and taxi services between Nicosia and the principal towns and villages were severely disrupted by the Turkish invasion. The north and south are now served by separate transport systems, and there are no services linking the two sectors.

SHIPPING

Until 1974 Famagusta was the island's most important harbour, handling about 83 per cent of the country's cargo. Famagusta is a natural port capable of receiving ships of a maximum draught of 9.2 metres. Since its capture by the Turkish army in August 1974 the port has been officially declared closed to international traffic. However, it continues to serve the Turkish-occupied region.

The ports which serve the island's maritime trade at present are Larnaca and Limassol, which were constructed in 1973 and 1974 respectively. Development plans include the expansion of these two ports, a new breakwater port outside Paphos, in the west, and a deep-water port at Vassiliko.

In 1978 Limassol and Larnaca handled 980,000 tons in imports, 1,200,000 tons in exports, 30,000 containers, 150,000 passengers and 4,000 ships. Limassol, the principal port, handled most of the import, passenger and all of the container traffic. Exports were evenly distributed between the two ports. Larnaca is the island's main petroleum port.

Both Kyrenia and Karavostassi are under Turkish occupation and have been declared closed to international traffic. Karavostassi used to be the country's major mineral port dealing with 76 per cent of the total mineral exports. However, since the war minerals are being passed through Vassiliko and Limni which are open roadsteads. In 1977 a hydrofoil service was started between Kyrenia and Mersin on the Turkish mainland.

In recent years the number of merchant vessels registered in Cyprus has risen sharply from 314 (1,575,702 g.r.t.) in 1970 to 1,245 (2,701,815 g.r.t.) in December 1978.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Czechoslovak Socialist Republic lies in Central Europe. Its neighbours are Poland to the north, the German Democratic Republic to the north-west, the Federal Republic of Germany in the west, Austria to the south-west, Hungary to the south-east and the U.S.S.R. in the extreme east. The state is composed of two main population groups, the Czechs (64.3 per cent of the total population) and the Slovaks (30.5 per cent). The climate is continental, with warm summers and cold winters, average mean temperature 9°C (49°F). The official languages, which are mutually understandable, are Czech and Slovak, members of the west Slavonic group. There is a Hungarian-speaking minority in Slovakia. About 70 per cent of the people are Roman Catholics and 15 per cent Protestants. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has horizontal stripes of white and red, with a blue triangle (half the length) at the hoist. The capital is Prague (Praha).

Recent History

The 1946 post-war elections returned the Communists as the strongest single party, and their leader, Klement Gottwald, became Prime Minister in a coalition government. After Ministers of other parties resigned, Communist control became complete in February 1948. A People's Republic was established in June 1948. Gottwald replaced Edvard Beneš as President, a position he held until his death in 1953. The country aligned itself with the Soviet-led East European bloc, joining the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) and the Warsaw Pact.

Under Gottwald, government followed a rigid Stalinist pattern, and in the early 1950s there were many political trials. Although these died out under Gottwald's successors, Antonín Zápotocký and, from 1956, Antonín Novotný, de-Stalinization was late in coming to Czechoslovakia, and no relaxation was felt until 1963, when a new government under Jozef Lenárt was formed. Meanwhile, the country was renamed the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic under a new constitution proclaimed in July 1960.

In January 1968 Alexander Dubček succeeded Novotný as Party Secretary and in March Ludvík Svoboda succeeded him as President. Oldřich Černík became Prime Minister in April 1968. The policies of the new government were more independent and liberal, and envisaged widespread reforms. These were seen by other members of the East European bloc as endangering their unity, and in August 1968 Warsaw Pact forces occupied Prague and other major cities. The Soviet Government exerted heavy pressure on Czechoslovak leaders to suppress their reformist policies and in April 1969 Dubček was replaced by Dr. Gustáv Husák as First Secretary of the Communist Party. Although Dr. Husák resisted some pressure for stricter control and political trials, there was a severe purge of Communist Party membership, and most of Dubček's supporters were removed from the Government. The first elections since 1964 were held in November 1971 and showed a 99.81 per cent vote in favour of National Front candidates.

In May 1975 Dr. Husák was appointed President of the Republic while still holding the position of Chairman of the National Front and Secretary of the Communist Party. Dr. Husák was re-elected Party leader in April 1976 and again in April 1981, and was re-elected President in May 1980. General elections were held in June 1981, and National Front candidates again obtained almost 100 per cent of the votes cast.

In January 1977 a manifesto known as Charter 77, protesting against the lack of civil rights in Czechoslovakia, was published in the West. Many of the hundreds of Czechoslovak intellectuals and former politicians who signed the Charter were arrested, tried on various charges and imprisoned, and relations between Czechoslovakia and a number of Western countries became strained. Despite attempts by the Government to suppress the activists, the civil rights campaign continued. In March 1978 Dr. Husák's position was strengthened when the secretariat of the Central Committee of the Communist Party was expanded to eight members. A purge of Party members began in 1979 but, although the arrest and detention of activists continued, the Charter was reported to have attracted 1,036 signatures by August 1980.

Government

Czechoslovakia is a federal state of two nations of equal rights, the Czechs and the Slovaks, and composed of two republics each having its own government. The supreme organ of state power is the Federal Assembly, elected for a five-year term by all citizens over the age of 18, and having two chambers, the House of the People and the House of Nations. Membership of the former is proportional to the population of the Republic. In June 1981, 136 deputies were elected from the Czech Socialist Republic and 64 from the Slovak Socialist Republic. The House of Nations has 150 members, 75 from each of the republics. The Federal Assembly elects the President for a five-year term of office, and he, in turn, appoints the Federal Government, led by the Prime Minister, to hold executive authority. Ministers are responsible to the Assembly.

Each of the two constituent republics has its own government (responsible for all matters except external relations, defence, overseas trade, transport and communications) and its own elected National Council or parliament.

Political power is held by the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, which dominates the National Front (including four other minor parties). All candidates for representative bodies are sponsored by the Front. The Communist Party's highest authority is the Party Congress, which elects the Central Committee (123 members were elected in April 1981) to supervise Party work. The Committee elects a Presidium (12 full members and one alternate member) to direct policy.

Defence

Czechoslovakia is a member of the Warsaw Pact. Military service is compulsory and lasts for two years in the army and three years in the air force. Service with the reserve lasts until the age of 50. In July 1981 the army numbered 140,000 (100,000 conscripts) and the air force 54,000 (17,000 conscripts); border troops numbered 11,000. The People's Militia comprises 120,000 part-time personnel. Defence expenditure in 1980 totalled 22,400 million korunas. As a result of the invasion of 1968, Soviet forces occupy permanent positions on the frontier with the Federal Republic of Germany.

Economic Affairs

Although Czechoslovakia depends on the U.S.S.R. for many raw materials, it is a highly industrialized country. In 1978 the manufacturing sector contributed 60 per cent to the national income, of which the construction industry accounted for about 11 per cent. Industry is state-owned. Output of motor cars and cycles is important, and other industries are glass, beer, ceramics, footwear and textiles.

Agriculture has been collectivized and about 95 per cent of the land is under agricultural co-operatives, state farms or communal enterprises. Important crops are wheat, barley, potatoes and sugar beet. Forestry is also significant, roughly one third of the territory being wooded.

The fourth Five-Year Plan (1966–70) aimed to develop the power and chemical industries, modernize machinery building and improve consumer services. Radical reforms were proposed, including the decentralization of industry, autonomy for individual state enterprises, and the acceptance of Western capital for joint ventures, but a return to strong central management of the economy came in 1969.

The targets of the Fifth Five-Year Plan (1971–75) were exceeded. National income rose by 31.7 per cent, 3.7 per cent above the target, and investment went up by 44.1 per cent. The gross national product increased by 38 per cent, and industrial output grew by 37.5 per cent. During the period of the sixth Five-Year Plan (1976–80) gross national income rose by 20 per cent. Industrial output grew by 25 per cent (the engineering sector by 38 per cent), and agricultural production by 9 per cent. However, since 1977 Czechoslovakia has been experiencing an economic slowdown, due mainly to adverse weather conditions, poor harvests (necessitating large imports of grain), labour shortages, energy problems and less favourable terms of trade. In 1978, as a result of the failure of certain sectors to achieve planned growth rates, the Government was obliged to revise several targets downwards. In February it was announced that new measures aimed at increasing autonomy and improving efficiency were to be introduced for a three-year period. National income in 1979 rose by 2.8 per cent over the previous year, and by 3 per cent in 1980. In 1978 industrial production grew by 5 per cent as planned, but by only 3.7 per cent in 1979 and 2.7 per cent in 1980. However, agricultural production increased by 5.5 per cent in 1980, compared with 1.5 per cent in 1978. Investment in 1980 was 1.2 per cent greater than in 1979, but failed to achieve the target of a 2 per cent increase.

The seventh Five-Year Plan (1981–85) envisages a 14–16 per cent increase in national income, although the annual volume of investment will not be increased. Priority is to be given to the development of industry, particularly the engineering sector. A proposed new planning system for enterprises creates scope for material incentives to improve production.

Czechoslovakia is a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA), and member countries accounted for 69.9 per cent of total trade turnover in 1980, about 35 per cent of which was with the U.S.S.R. Foreign trade accounts for 30 per cent of national income. There is considerable trade with West European countries, notably the Federal Republic of Germany, Austria and the United Kingdom. However, Czechoslovakia's share in world trade fell from 1.5 per cent in 1965 to 0.9 per cent in 1980 and a determined attempt is now being made to increase this share, particularly through the export of industrial products. Principal exports include machinery and equipment, chemicals and fuels, and glass and other manufactured goods. Czechoslovakia's external debt was estimated at U.S. $3,200 million at the end of 1979.

Transport and Communications

Almost half of all freight traffic is carried by the railways; they have a total length of 13,131 km., of which 3,030 km. are electrified. Roads (totalling 73,820 km. in 1979) carry over 80 per cent of the passenger transport. The Elbe and Danube are navigable and Czechoslovakia's overseas trade passes through East and West German, Polish, Yugoslav and Black Sea ports. Civil aviation is important and there are about 60 regular internal services. There are three international airports.

Social Welfare

A single and universal system of social security was established in Czechoslovakia after the Second World War. All workers and employees benefit equally from the insurance scheme. Protection of health is provided for by law, with particular emphasis on the prevention of illness rather than treatment and cure. Medical care, treatment, medicines, etc. are free for the entire Czechoslovak population. In 1979 there were 47,500 physicians and 186,400 hospital beds. The National Health Insurance Scheme is administered by the Revolutionary Trade Union Movement, which also supervises other aspects of social welfare. Sick-ness benefit is paid for a maximum period of two years, after which time disablement pension applies. Social security is guaranteed for all through different schemes: for wage-earners, members of co-operative societies, members of agricultural co-operatives, pensioners and members of the armed forces. Benefits and rights are the same for all these groups. Great importance is attached to maternity benefits and family allowances.

Education

Education at all levels is provided free. Many children between the ages of three and six years attend kindergarten (mateřská škola). Education is compulsory between the ages of 6 and 16 years, when children attend the basic school (základní škola). A general curriculum is followed by more specialized subjects. Most Czechoslovak children continue their education after the basic school. Secondary grammar schools provide four years of general education, and prepare students for university. Education of the same level is provided by working peoples' secondary schools, which had 30,517 students in 1979/80. Four-year secondary vocational schools train young people as specialists in the fields of economics, administration and culture, or prepare them for studies at institutes of higher learning. Courses at the specialized apprentice training centres last from two to four years, and prepare young people for workers' professions.

Tourism

Czechoslovakia has magnificent scenery, with winter sports facilities. Prague is the best known of the historic cities and there are famous castles and cathedrals, numerous resorts and 57 spas with natural mineral springs, notably Mariánské Lázně (Marienbad) and Karlovy Vary (Carlsbad). Over 18.5 million tourists visited Czechoslovakia in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: April 12th (Easter Monday), May 1st (Labour

Day), May 9th (National Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

FINANCE

100 haléřů (singular haléř—heller) = 1 koruna (Czechoslovak crown or Kčs.).

Coins: 5, 10, 20 and 50 haléřů; 1, 2 and 5 Kčs.

Notes: 10, 20, 50, 100 and 500 Kčs.

Exchange rates (October 1981): £1 sterling = 21.94 Kčs.; U.S. $1 = 11.74 Kčs. (non-commercial rates).

1,000 Kčs. = £45.57 = $85.18.

Note: Prior to August 1971 the basic exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 7.20 korunas (1 koruna = 13.89 U.S. cents). From December 1971 to February 1973 the rate was $1 = 6.63 korunas (1 koruna = 15.08 U.S. cents). Since March 1973 the rate has fluctuated between 5.3 and 6.2 korunas per dollar. In terms of sterling, the basic rate between November 1967 and June 1972 was £1 = 17.28 korunas. The non-commercial rate, applicable to tourism and remittances from outside the CMEA, varies from 10 to 12 korunas per dollar.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Proclaimed on July 11th, 1960; amended October 1968, July 1971 and May 1975.)

The Czechoslovak Socialist Republic is a Federal State of two fraternal nations possessing equal rights, the Czechs and the Slovaks.

According to the Constitution, work in the interests of the community is a primary duty and the right to work a primary right of every citizen. All citizens have equal rights and equal duties without regard to nationality and race. Remuneration for work done is based on its quantity, quality and social importance. Men and women have equal status. All citizens have the right to health protection, education and leisure after work including paid holidays. Other rights include: freedom of expression, assembly, inviolability of the person, the home, mail, etc. Everyone has the right to profess any religious faith or to be without religious conviction.

The economic foundation of the State is the Socialist economic system which excludes every form of exploitation of man by man. The means of production are socially owned and the entire national economy is directed by plan. Socialist ownership includes both national property such as mineral wealth, the means of industrial production, banks, etc., and co-operative property. The land of members of agricultural co-operatives remains the personal property of the individual members, but is jointly farmed by the co-operative. Small private enterprises based on the labour of the owner himself and excluding exploitation of another's labour power are permitted. Personal ownership of consumer goods, family houses and savings derived from labour is inviolable. Inheritance of such personal property is guaranteed.

The Czechoslovak Constitution does not restrict itself to laying down a system of state organs but also sets forth the principles by which the life of society is to be guided. It is not just a Constitution of the State but a constitution for the whole of society. In economic, political and cultural life, in questions of social security and many other spheres it emphasizes the participation of citizens in the administration of public affairs and even transfers a number of functions that have hitherto pertained to state organs to the working people and their voluntary organizations.

The guiding force in society and in the State is the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia, a voluntary militant alliance of the most active and politically conscious citizens. It is associated with the other political parties, the Trade Union Movement and other people's organizations in the National Front of Czechs and Slovaks.

FEDERAL ASSEMBLY

The supreme organ of state power in the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic is the Federal Assembly (Parliament) which is elected for a five-year term and elects the President of the Republic. He may be relieved of his duties by the Assembly if he has been unable to fulfil them for over a year. The Federal Assembly consists of two chambers of equal rights: the House of the People and the House of Nations. The composition of the House of the People corresponds to the composition of the population of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic and of its 200 deputies, 131 are Czechs, 59 Slovaks and 10 other nationalities. The House of Nations has 150 deputies on parity basis: 75 are elected in the Czech Socialist Republic and 75 in the Slovak Socialist Republic. Of its 150 deputies, 72 are Czechs, 64 Slovaks and 14 other nationalities.

PRESIDENT

The President, elected by the Federal Assembly, appoints the Federal Government. The Government is the supreme executive organ of State power in Czechoslovakia; it consists of a Prime Minister, 10 Deputy Prime Ministers and 16 Ministers. The Ministries of Foreign Affairs, of National Defence, of Foreign Trade, of Transport and of Posts and Telecommunications, are within the exclusive competence of the Federation, i.e. there are no corresponding portfolios in the governments of the republics. The second group of Federal Government organs share authority with organs of the two republics, i.e. there are corresponding portfolios in the national governments.

ELECTORAL SYSTEM

All representative bodies are elected, and the right to elect is universal, equal and by secret ballot. Every citizen has the right to vote on reaching the age of 18, and is eligible for election on reaching the age of 21. Deputies must maintain constant contacts with their constituents, heed their suggestions and be accountable to them for their activity. A member of any representative body may be recalled by his constituents at any time.

For election purposes, the country is divided into electoral districts; there are 200 electoral districts in the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, each represented by one deputy in the House of the People, and 75 electoral districts each in the Czech and Slovak Socialist Republics, which send one deputy each to the House of Nations.

All candidates are National Front candidates, put forward by the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia and by the other political parties and social organizations associated in the National Front. One or more candidates can be nominated for one electoral district. Appropriate National Front organs select the candidates from the list of nominees, and submit their names for registration.

The principle of simple majority obtains in the elections: the candidate is elected when he obtains more than 50 per cent of the votes cast, provided that the majority of all voters in his electoral district exercise their right to vote. When either of the two conditions is not met, new elections are held in the electoral district concerned within two weeks. When a seat becomes vacant, the Presidium of the Federal Assembly calls a by-election in the constituency; this is not mandatory in the last year of the deputies' term of office.

NATIONAL COUNCILS

Each of the republics has its own parliament: the Czech National Council and the Slovak National Council. The members are elected for a five-year term of office. The Czech National Council has 200 deputies, the Slovak National Council 150 deputies. There are also separate Czech and Slovak Governments, each consisting of a Prime Minister, 3 Deputy Prime Ministers and 15 other Ministers.

NATIONAL COMMITTEES

National committees are the organs of popular self-government in the regions, districts and localities. The members are elected for a five-year term of office. They rely on the active participation of the working people of their area and co-operate with other organizations of the people. They direct local economic and cultural development, ensure the protection of socialist ownership and the maintenance of socialist order in society, see to the implementation and observance of laws, etc. They take part in drafting and carrying out the State plan for the development of the national economy and draw up their own budgets which form a part of the State budget. Commissions elected by the national committees are charged with various aspects of public work and carry out their tasks with the aid of a large number of citizens who need not be elected members of the national committees.

THE PRESS

Although the Czechoslovak Press was considerably affected by the events of 1968, its basic purpose is still as defined in the October 1966 Press Law: "to give as far as possible complete information . . . to advance the interest of socialist society . . . to promote the people's socialist awareness of the policy of the Communist Party as the leading force in society and state".

This law, which codified previous legislation on the rights and duties of journalists and publishers states that "freedom of expression and of the Press is guaranteed by the fact that publishers and press organizations . . . have been placed at the disposal of the working people and their organizations". Hence, only political parties and such social institutions associated with the National Front as trade unions, youth unions, cultural associations and rural co-operatives may own newspapers and periodicals. Private ownership is forbidden. But even collective ownership rests upon official approval; papers must be registered with the Czech or Slovak Office for the Press and Information, and when the Editor fails to observe the conditions under which approval was given, the paper may be suspended.

During 1968 there was freedom of publication and Western books circulated in large editions. Censorship was abolished in June, but restored again in September. In 1969 censorship was again abolished, but the necessity for official approval has since prevented the publication of ideologically dissenting journals. The Editor of a paper or periodical bears full responsibility for its contents.

The Czechoslovak people far exceed other East European nations in their consumption per head of newspapers and magazines. There are thirty daily papers, including nine in Prague and nine (one in Hungarian and the rest in Slovak) in Bratislava. About 500 weekly papers and magazines and an even greater number of less frequent periodicals are also published. In addition, farms and factories produce their own daily or weekly news-sheets, dealing mainly with local issues. All registered periodicals receive an allocation of newsprint.

Political speeches and articles on social and economic development are given special prominence. In contrast with much of the East European Press, which is often characterized as dull and lacking in popular appeal, the Czechoslovak Press is relatively lively and colourful and allows a qualified scope for criticism. There is no tabloid press as the policy is to play down such items as constitute the sort of sensationalism familiar to the West. Advertising is now more common than formerly, and although mainly concerned with state enterprises, it includes some material from abroad. Sales are mainly by subscription.

The most widely read and influential papers are the Prague dailies headed by Rudé právo. This paper is the chief organ of the Czechoslovak Communist Party. It is eight pages long and has a nation-wide circulation of 900,000 copies. Its sister paper, the Slovak C.P.'s Pravda (330,000), is the leading provincial daily. The Czech and the Slovak Trade Union organs are Práce and Práca in their respective cities. Three other important metropolitan dailies are Lidová demokracie and Svobodné slovo, produced respectively by the People's Party and the Socialist Party, and Mladá fronta, published by the Central Committee of the Socialist Union of Youth.

There are also many small circulation periodicals—often of very high quality—dealing with specialized subjects. One should also note several very popular and colourful women's magazines, such as Vlasta (740,000), and the satirical Dikobraz, famous for its political cartoons.

The national news agency, Československá tisková kancelář (ČTK), receives a state subsidy and is controlled by the Federal Government through its Presidium.

PUBLISHERS

In May 1949 legislation was passed making the publication, printing, illustration, and distribution of all books and music the prerogative of the State. These activities are now restricted to the Government, political parties, trade unions, and national and communal bodies. However, churches and religious bodies are permitted to publish if the State will accept their work for printing. In 1979, 7,151 titles were published.

DENMARK

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Denmark consists of the peninsula of Jutland, the islands of Zealand, Funen, Lolland, Falster and Bornholm and 480 smaller islands between the North Sea and the Baltic. Outlying territories are Greenland and the Faeroe Islands in the North Atlantic. Denmark is low-lying and the climate is temperate with mild summers and cold, rainy winters. The language is Danish. The Danish Lutheran Church is the established Church, to which 94 per cent of the population belong, and there are small communities of Roman Catholics, Baptists and Jews. The national flag (proportions 37 by 28) carries a white cross on a red background, the upright of the cross being to the left of centre. The capital is Copenhagen.

Recent History

On the ending of German occupation in 1945 Denmark recognized the independence of Iceland, which had been declared the previous year. Home rule was granted to the Faeroe Islands in 1948 and to Greenland in 1979. Denmark was a founder member of NATO in 1949 and of the Nordic Council in 1952. On the death of King Frederik IX in January 1972 his eldest daughter, Margrethe, became the first queen to rule Denmark for nearly 600 years. Following a referendum, Denmark entered the EEC in January 1973.

The system of proportional representation embodied in the 1953 Constitution makes it difficult for a single party to gain a majority in the Folketing, and the tendency of Danish parties to fragment has produced a series of coalition and minority governments in recent years. In the general elections of December 1973, ten parties were represented in the Folketing, compared with five in the previous parliament. The Liberal Party, led by Poul Hartling, formed a minority government which had to face economic problems and popular discontent with Denmark's EEC membership. Following general elections in January 1975 and the subsequent resignation of the Liberals, a minority Social Democratic government under the leadership of Anker Jørgensen was formed in February 1975. In March 1977 the re-elected Government reached an inter-party agreement on several issues crucial to its incomes policy. To avoid a massive strike, a two-year collective wage agreement was conceded in April, but in October indirect taxation was raised considerably.

In view, however, of the need for economic reform to deal with the extent of national indebtedness, the Social Democratic cabinet in August 1978 formed a coalition with the Liberal Party, introducing stringent financial measures which included the imposition in March 1979 of a two-year statutory limit on wage rises. The Government resigned in September following the Liberals' refusal to support a proposed profit-sharing scheme for industrial workers. Following general elections in October, the Social Democrats formed a minority government, with Jørgensen remaining as Prime Minister.

In May 1980 the Government, with the support of the three centre parties (the Radical Liberals, the Centre Democrats and the Christian People's Party), implemented measures including increased taxes and a cut in public spending in an attempt to tighten control of the economy and redirect public spending emphasis from social services towards investments with the potential to ease Denmark's perennial balance of payments problems. Despite considerable industrial unrest during 1981, the Government retained office. At the outset of the 1981-82 parliamentary session, however, with unemployment at a postwar record of 9 per cent, a crisis arose when the three centre parties withdrew their support for a compromise economic package which included a requirement that private and state pension funds reinvest about 3,000 million kroner under government direction, a measure which the Social Democrats claimed was essential to economic recovery. The Government resigned in November, and general elections were due to be held in December (see Late Information).

Government

Denmark is a constitutional monarchy. Under the 1953 constitutional charter, legislative power is held jointly by the hereditary monarch (who has no personal political power) and the unicameral Folketing (Parliament), with 179 members, including 175 from metropolitan Denmark and two each from the Faeroe Islands and Greenland. Members are elected for four years (subject to dissolution) by proportional representation. A referendum in September 1978 reduced the age of suffrage from 20 to 18. Executive power is exercised by the monarch through a Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister, which is responsible to the Folketing. Denmark comprises 14 counties (amtskommuner), one city and one borough, all with elected councils.

Defence

In July 1981 Denmark maintained an army of 19,300 men, a navy of 5,700 men and an air force of 7,600 men. The army has some 46,000 reservists, and there is a volunteer Home Guard of 56,500 men. Military service is for nine months. Denmark abandoned its neutrality after the Second World War and has been a member of NATO since 1949. The defence budget for 1981 was 8,100 million kroner, an increase of 1 per cent, thereby breaking the NATO agreement to make a 3 per cent real increase annually, and causing friction between Denmark and its NATO allies.

Economic Affairs

Danish agriculture is internationally competitive and is organized on a co-operative basis. The co-operatives are united in national federations. Butter, beef and bacon are the main agricultural exports. The proportion of the working population employed in agriculture declined from 21 per cent in 1950 to 7 per cent in 1980, although 70 per cent of the land surface was used for agriculture in 1979. The intensive nature of the farming has, to a large extent, maintained the level of production. Danish agriculture has expanded production under the stimulus of subsidies from the EEC common agricultural policy, but in 1980 rising costs, unmatched by a corresponding rise in prices, resulted in financial hardship for farmers, and the

Denmark has industrialized considerably since 1945 and industry now accounts for over two-thirds of the country's exports. In spite of a great shortage of raw materials, the iron and metal industry is now the most important producing group. The other major industries are food-processing and beverages, fishing, shipbuilding, engineering and chemicals. Denmark's economy suffers from the country's dependence on imports for 80 per cent of its energy needs. A decision was made in January 1980 not to develop nuclear energy. However, petroleum exploitation in the Danish sector of the North Sea is expected to provide 30 per cent of Denmark's energy needs by 1984, and in March 1981 the Government introduced measures which will effectively place the fields under state control by 1986.

There have been balance of payments deficits on current account every year since 1963, largely due to Denmark's reliance on imported petroleum, and large loans have been contracted abroad to cover the deficit. Denmark's current balance of payments deficit was reduced to an estimated 13,800 million kroner in 1980 from 15,300 million kroner in 1979. At the end of 1980, external indebtedness totalled 94,000 million kroner, or 25 per cent of G.D.P. Over the period since the 1973-74 energy crisis, various economic measures have been taken to control inflation. Wage controls were introduced for a two-year period from March 1979 and in June, with rising oil prices leading Denmark to record levels of external debt, increased taxes were levied on energy, indirect taxation was raised and public spending cut. A 3 per cent devaluation of the krone followed in September and in November a temporary freeze was imposed on prices, wages and rents, extended until March 1981 in a less stringent form. The rate of inflation, which reached 12 per cent in 1978, declined to 9.6 per cent in 1979 and rose to 12.3 per cent in 1980. Denmark's G.D.P. declined by 1 per cent in 1980 and was expected to remain static in 1981. Unemployment has remained high, spending on social welfare has been reduced (see Recent History) and government economic measures have brought about an estimated decline of around 13 per cent in real disposable household income since the mid-1970s. Although the current account deficit has evidenced a modestly downward trend since June 1981, when Denmark recorded its first monthly trade surplus since 1958, the immediate economic outlook remains clouded although benefits should flow from North Sea energy after 1984.

Transport and Communications

There are about 2,500 km. of railways, most of which are operated by the State. There were 68,909 km. of roads at the end of 1980. Ferry services connect the principal islands and Jutland and there are services to Sweden, Norway and Germany. Denmark maintains a large merchant navy with a displacement of over 5 million gross tons. The present international airport is at Kastrup. Projects for a new international airport for Copenhagen and plans to build a bridge across the Great Belt to link Zealand and Funen were once again postponed in 1978.

Social Welfare

Denmark was one of the first countries to introduce State social welfare schemes. Principal services cover unemployment, sickness, old age and disability and are financed largely by State subventions. In 1980, 33 per cent of the budget was allocated to social welfare. A new system was introduced in that year whereby social benefits are regulated according to the individual's means.

Education

Education is compulsory for nine years, though exemption may be granted after seven years. The State is obliged to offer a tenth voluntary year, while provisions for a twelve-year system are planned. State-subsidized private schools are available, though over 90 per cent of pupils attend State schools. The 1975 Education Act, with effect from August 1976, increased parental influence, introduced a comprehensive curriculum for the first 10 years and offered options on final tests or a leaving certificate thereafter. At the age of 16 or 17, pupils may transfer to a grammar school (gymnasium) to take the university entrance examination (studentereksamen) after three years or they may take a new two-year course leading to the higher preparatory examination certificate.

There are five universities and three technical universities in Denmark. Nursery classes and vocational training schemes are increasingly in demand. The traditional folk high schools offer a wide range of further education opportunities.

Tourism

Tourists visit Denmark for the peaceful charm of its countryside and old towns, or for the sophistication of Copenhagen. Tourism accounted for 7,530 million kroner in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: April 8th-12th (Easter), May 7th (General Prayer Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), May 31st (Whitsun), June 5th (Constitution Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 øre = 1 Danish krone.

Exchange rates (October 1981):

£1 sterling = 13.33 kroner;
U.S. $1 = 7.125 kroner.

FINANCE

100 øre = 1 Danish krone (kr.).

Coins: 5, 10 and 25 øre; 1, 5 and 10 kroner.

Notes: 20, 50, 100, 500 and 1,000 kroner.

Exchange rates (October 1981): £1 sterling = 13.33 kroner; U.S. $1 = 7.125 kroner.

100 Danish kroner = £7.50 = $14.04.

Note: Between November 1967 and August 1971 the official exchange rate (par value) was U.S. $1 = 7.50 kroner (1 krone = 13.33 U.S. cents). From December 1971 to February 1973 the central exchange rate was $1 = 6.98 kroner. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 18.00 kroner from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 18.188 kroner from December 1971 to June 1972. Since March 1973 the krone has been allowed to "float" against the U.S. dollar. The average exchange rate (kroner per dollar) was: 6.0495 in 1973; 6.0949 in 1974; 5.7462 in 1975; 6.0450 in 1976; 6.0032 in 1977; 5.5146 in 1978; 5.2610 in 1979; 5.6359 in 1980.

* Excluding trade in gold, silver specie and returned goods. Also excluded is non-commercial trade in military goods. Before 1974 Denmark's trade with the Faeroe Islands and Greenland was excluded from foreign trade data. However, the totals for 1973 have been revised to include this trade. Prior to 1978, figures are on the basis of "general trade". From 1978 the basis has been adjusted to "special trade". Totals on a "general trade" basis (in million kroner) are: Imports 81,405 in 1978, 98,292 in 1979, 110,645 in 1980; Exports 65,308 in 1978, 78,083 in 1979, 95,349 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

The main features of the 1953 Constitution are:

- (1) Changes in the succession law allowing a daughter to succeed to the throne in the absence of sons;
- (2) Abolition of the Upper House and the introduction of single-chamber Parliament;
- (3) The enfranchisement of Greenland, which will in future send two members to Parliament; and
- (4) Clause 20, which enables Parliament to assign some of its rights to an international body in the interest of international co-operation.

GOVERNMENT

The form of government is a limited (constitutional) monarchy. The legislative authority rests jointly with the Crown and Parliament. Executive power is vested in the Crown, and the administration of justice is exercised by the courts. The Monarch can constitutionally "do no wrong". She exercises her authority through the Ministers appointed by her. The Ministers are responsible for the government of the country. The Constitution establishes the principle of Parliamentarism under which individual Ministers or the whole Cabinet must retire when defeated in Parliament by a vote of no confidence.

MONARCH

The Monarch acts on behalf of the State in international affairs. Except with the consent of the Parliament, she cannot, however, take any action which increases or reduces the area of the Realm or undertake any obligation, the fulfilment of which requires the co-operation of the Parliament or which is of major importance. Nor can the Monarch, without the consent of the Parliament, terminate any international agreement which has been concluded with the consent of the Parliament.

Apart from defence against armed attack on the Realm or on Danish forces, the Monarch cannot, without the consent of the Parliament, employ military force against any foreign power.

PARLIAMENT

The Parliament is an assembly consisting of not more than 179 members, two of whom are elected in the Faeroe Islands and two in Greenland. It is called the Folketing. Danish nationals, having attained 18 years of age, with permanent residence in Denmark, have the franchise and are eligible. The members of the Folketing are elected for four years. Election is by a system of proportional representation, with direct and secret ballot on lists in large constituencies. A bill adopted by the Folketing may be submitted to referendum, when such referendum is claimed by not less than one-third of the members of the Folketing and not later than three days after the adoption. The bill is void if rejected by a majority of the votes cast, representing not less than 30 per cent of all electors.

POLITICAL PARTIES

Socialdemokratiet (The Social-Democratic Party): Nyropsgade 26, 1602 Copenhagen V; f. 1871; finds its chief adherents among workers, employees and public servants. 110,000 members. Chair. ANKER JØRGENSEN; Gen. Sec. EYNER HOVGAARD CHRISTIANSEN. Party organs: Vor Politik (quarterly) and Ny Politik (monthly).

Venstre (The Liberal Party): Hammerichsgade 14, Copenhagen V; founded in 1870. Its main adherents have been farmers but recently its votes have been distributed almost equally between the rural districts, the towns and built-up areas, so that it may claim to have adherents in all classes of the community. The main planks in the Party platform are free trade, a minimum of State interference, and the adoption, in matters of social expenditure, of a modern general social security system. Chair. POUL HARTLING; Sec.-Gen. KURT SØRENSEN. Chief party organs: Fyns Tidende, Vestkysten, Frederiksborg Amts Avis.

Konservative Folkeparti (Conservative Party): Vesterbrogade 40, 1620 Copenhagen V; f. 1916; advocates free initiative and the maintenance of private property, but recognizes the right of the State to take action to keep the economic and social balance. Chair. POUL SCHLÜTER; Sec.-Gen. TORBEN RECHENDORFF. Chief party organ: Vor Tid.

Socialistisk Folkeparti (Socialist People's Party): Folketorget, Christiansborg, 1218 Copenhagen K; f. 1959, with Socialist aims, by AKSEL LARSEN. Chair. GERT PETERSEN; Sec. LILLIAN UBBESEN. Chief party organ: Socialistisk Dagblad (daily).

Det radikale Venstre (The Radical Liberal Party): Det radikale Venstres sekretariat, Christiansborg, 1218 Copenhagen K; f. 1905. The main points in its programme are: international détente and co-operation within regional and world organizations, social reforms without socialism, incomes policy, workers' participation in industry, state intervention in industrial disputes, state control of trusts and monopolies, strengthening private enterprise. Chair. THORKILD MØLLER; Gen. Sec. S. BJØRN HANSEN. Chief

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

In Denmark the judiciary is independent of the Government. Judges are appointed by the Crown on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice and cannot be dismissed except by judicial sentence.

The ordinary courts are divided into three instances, namely the Lower Courts, the High Courts and the Supreme Court. There is one Lower Court for each of the eighty-four judicial districts in the country. These courts must have at least one legally trained judge and they hear the majority of minor cases. The two High Courts serve Jutland and the islands respectively. They serve as appeal courts for cases from the lower courts, but are also used to give first hearing to the more important cases. Each case must be heard by at least three judges. The Supreme Court, at which at least five judges must sit, is the court of appeal for cases from the Higher Courts. Usually only one appeal is allowed from either court, but in special instances the Minister of Justice may give leave for a second appeal, to the Supreme Court, from a case which started in a lower court.

There is a special Maritime and Commercial Court in Copenhagen, consisting of a President and two Vice-Presidents with legal training and a number of commercial and nautical assessors; and also a Labour Court, which deals with labour disputes.

An Ombudsman is appointed by Parliament, after each general election, and is concerned with defects in the laws or administrative provisions. He must render an annual report to Parliament.

THE PRESS

Denmark's long press history dates from the first newspaper published in 1666, but it was not until press freedom was introduced by law in 1849 that newspapers began to assume their present importance. The per caput circulation of Danish newspapers is one of the highest in the world. There are over 220 separate newspapers, and over 40 main dailies.

The freedom of the press is embodied in paragraph 77 of the 1953 Constitution and all censorship laws have been abolished. The legal limits to press comment are wide, legislation on defamation being chiefly concerned to protect the reputation of the individual. The Law of 1938 included provision for a Board of Denials and Corrections to be established to guard the individual's right to require a newspaper to correct factual errors. This Press Law makes editors legally responsible for the contents of a paper with the exception of signed articles for which the author is responsible.

Most newspapers and magazines are privately owned and published by joint concerns, co-operatives or limited liability companies. The main concentration of papers is held by the Berlingske Tidende Group which owns Berlingske Tidende, Weekendavisen, B.T. and the provincial Jydske Tidende, three weekly magazines and a large printing works controlling some 25 per cent of the total daily newspaper circulation.

Another company, Politiken A/S, owns several dailies, including Politiken and Ekstra Bladet, one weekly and a large publishing house. De Bergske Blade owns a group of six Liberal papers.

There is no truly national press. Copenhagen accounts for 16 per cent of the national dailies and about half the total circulation. The provincial press has declined since the last war, but still tends to be more politically orientated than the majority of Copenhagen dailies. The Communist Party's Land og Folk is the only paper to be directly owned by a political party, although all papers show a fairly pronounced political leaning. The three Social Democrat papers, headed by Copenhagen's Aktuelt, are owned and subsidized by the trade unions.

The major Copenhagen dailies are Berlingske Tidende, Ekstra Bladet, B.T., Politiken and Aktuelt. The serious evening paper Information and the weekly Weekendavisen are also influential. The Aalborg Stiftstidende and Fyens Stiftstidende, published at Odense, are the largest provincial papers.

FINANCE

The first Danish commercial bank was founded in 1846. In January 1975, restrictions on savings banks were lifted, giving commercial and savings banks equal rights and status. Several foreign banks have representative offices in Copenhagen, and in January 1975 restrictions on the establishment of full branches of foreign banks were removed. In 1981 there were about 80 commercial banks and 160 savings banks, considerably fewer than 20 years earlier. All banks are under government supervision, and public representation is obligatory on all bank supervisory boards.

THE FAEROE ISLANDS

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Faeroes are a group of 18 islands in the Atlantic between Scotland and Iceland with a total area of 1,399 sq. km. The main island is Streymoy, where more than one-third of the population reside. The climate is mild in winter and cool in summer with a mean temperature of 7°C. Most Faeroese are Lutherans belonging to the Danish National Church. The principal language is Faeroese but Danish must be taught in all schools. The flag (proportions 22 by 16) carries a red cross with a blue edge on a white field. The capital is Thorshavn, which is situated on Streymoy.

History and Government

The Faeroe Islands have been under Danish administration since Queen Margrete of Denmark inherited Norway in 1380. The islands were occupied by the United Kingdom while Denmark was under German occupation but were restored immediately after the war. The Home Rule Act of 1948 gave them control over all their internal affairs. There is a parliament (Løgting) but the Danish Folketing, to which the Faeroese send two members, looks after matters such as defence and foreign policy, constitutional matters and the judicial and monetary systems.

The centre-left coalition government of Social Democrats, Republicans and the People's Party, formed in 1978, collapsed in 1980 over the winter operation of a government-owned passenger ferry to the mainland, opposed by the conservative People's Party. In general elections held in November, conservative political groups slightly increased their share of the popular vote, and although there was no material change in the balance of party representation in the Løgting, the Union Party formed a centre-right coalition with the People's and Home Rule Parties in January 1981.

Economic Affairs

Only some 6 per cent of the land surface is cultivated and as the summers are too cool for grain, the main crops are potatoes and vegetables and grass for the large number of sheep raised on the islands. Coal is mined at Suderoy and about one fifth of the working population is engaged in handicrafts. The most important sector of the Faeroese economy is fishing, which employed 17 per cent of the labour force in 1977 and contributed 23 per cent of a total G.D.P. of 1,907 million kroner in 1978, accounting for over 90 per cent of the islands' exports. In January 1974 the Løgting decided not to join the EEC but to negotiate a special trade agreement which would protect the fishing industry. Following Faeroese pressure, an agreement was reached limiting the annual cod and haddock catch of foreign trawlers from January 1974. In March 1977, despite protests from the EEC, the Faeroes imposed stringent conservation measures curbing fishing within a limit of 200 nautical miles (370 km.) from the coast. Danish subsidies account for about 15 per cent of the Faeroese G.N.P.

In 1940 the Faeroese krona was introduced. It must, however, always be freely interchangeable with the Danish krone at the rate of 1: 1. For exchange rate see under Denmark.

GOVERNMENT

The legislative body is the Løgting, elected on a basis of proportional representation. All Faeroese over the age of twenty have the right to vote. Based on the strength of the parties in the Løgting, a small Government, the Landsstyri, is formed and this is the administrative body in certain spheres, chiefly relating to Faeroese economic affairs. The Løgmaður or Chairman has to ratify all Løgting laws. A commissioner known as the Ríkisumbodsmáður represents the Danish Government.

GREENLAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Capital

Greenland is the world's largest island, with a total area of 2,175,600 square kilometres, and lies in the North Atlantic Ocean, east of Canada. Most of it is permanently covered by ice but 341,700 square kilometres of coastland are habitable. Danish and Greenlandic are the official languages. Godthåb (Nuuk) is the capital.

History, Government, Defence

Greenland first came under Danish rule in 1380. In the revision of the Danish constitution in 1953 Greenland became part of the Kingdom. Following the introduction of Home Rule in May 1979 Denmark remains responsible for foreign affairs and defence but Greenlanders are not subject to compulsory national service. Greenland sends two members of the Danish Folketing and one member to the European Parliament.

In October 1972 the Greenlanders voted by 9,658 to 3,990 against joining the EEC but, as part of Denmark, were bound by the Danish decision. Resentment of Danish domination of the economy, education and the professions continued, taking expression in 1977 in the formation of a nationalist left-wing party, the Siumut. In 1975 the Minister for Greenland appointed a commission to work out terms for Greenland Home Rule. Its proposals for a Parliament and Executive (Landsting and Landsstyre), with foreign policy and defence remaining under Danish control, were approved by the Danish Parliament in 1978. In January 1979 the Greenland electorate voted by 70.1 per cent to 25.8 per cent in favour of these proposals. The Siumut, led by a Lutheran pastor, Jonathan Motzfeldt, secured 13 seats in the 21-seat Landsting in general elections held in April, and a five-member Landsstyre with Motzfeldt as Prime Minister took office in May. During a transitional period the island is gradually assuming full administration of its internal affairs and in February 1982 was to hold a referendum on continued membership of the EEC.

Economic Affairs

Seal-hunting has traditionally been the main occupation in Greenland and it is still very important in the northern districts. In the south sheep-rearing is on the increase and in the central coastal areas fishing is of prime importance. In June 1980 the Danish Government declared an economic zone extending 200 nautical miles (370 km.) off the east coast of Greenland. Negotiations were begun with Norway and the Commission of the European Communities concerning fishing rights in overlapping zones.

The world's only commercially exploitable deposits of cryolite were mined at Ivigtut, West Greenland, and, although the mine is exhausted, exports will continue for the next few years. Lead and zinc concentrates are produced near Umanak, yearly production being about 45,000 tons and 150,000 tons respectively. Apart from the minerals and fish and fish produce, the main exports are sealskin and foxskin. In 1975 the Danish Government awarded the first concession for exploration and exploitation of three potential petroleum-producing areas of Greenland, but no oil was found and all concessions were terminated in 1978. Public authorities are investigating uranium and coal deposits, although the Government wants to delay exploitation until a final agreement is reached with Denmark on control of resources.

The economy is still dependent on large subsidies of about 1,000 million kroner per year from Denmark. Until 1950 Denmark had a monopoly of trade and industry in Greenland. Though this has now been abolished, Denmark still controls a substantial proportion of the total turnover in export production. Denmark provided about 75 per cent of Greenland's imports in 1980, and took some 50 per cent of total exports.

Education and Social Welfare

The educational system is the same as that for the main part of Denmark, except that the main language of instruction is Greenlandic. Danish is however quite widely used, as many teachers come from Denmark for a short term to relieve the shortage of local teachers. There is a school in every settlement and a teacher training college in Godthåb. In 1980/81 there were about 100 primary and lower secondary schools with 11,536 pupils and 1,074 teachers.

There is a free health service for all residents, administered by the Danish Government, with a total of 16 hospitals.

GOVERNMENT

The legislative body is the Landsting of 21 members elected on a basis of proportional representation. Greenlanders and Danes resident in Greenland over the age of eighteen have the right to vote. Based on the strength of the parties in the Landsting a five-member executive, the Landsstyre is formed. During a transitional period the Government will gradually assume control of the administration of Greenland's internal affairs. Jurisdiction in constitutional matters, foreign affairs and defence remains with Denmark.

LANDSSTYRE (November 1981)

Prime Minister and Secretary for Administration and the Economy: JONATHAN MOTZFELDT.

Secretary for Trade and Industry: LARS EMIL JOHANSEN.

Secretary for Schools and Cultural Affairs: THUE CHRIST-

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The island is divided into eighteen court districts and these courts all use lay assessors. For most cases these lower courts are for the first instance and appeal is to the Landsret, the higher court in Godthåb, which is the only one with a professional judge. This court hears the more serious cases in the first instance and appeal in these cases to the High Court (Østre Landsret) in Copenhagen.

RELIGION

The Greenlandic Church comes under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Copenhagen.

THE PRESS

There are no daily papers in Greenland.

TRANSPORT

Inland traffic is mainly by boat, sled, light aircraft and helicopter. Godthåb is the main port and there are also all-year ports at Faeringehavn, Frederikshåb, Sukkertoppen and Holsteinsborg. There are airports at Søndre Strømfjord and Narssarssuaq for flights to Denmark, operated by SAS, and for internal flights. In summer Icelandair run tourist flights from Reykjavik to Kulusuk Island in Angmagssalik fjord, and from Keflavik to Narssarssuaq on the west coast. In summer coastal motor vessels operate passenger services along the west coast from Upernavik to Narssarssuaq.

Grønlandsfly A/S: P.O.B. 1012, 3900 Godthåb; f. 1960; air services between Godthåb and Søndre Strømfjord and between Søndre Strømfjord and Kulusuk on the east coast and Godthåb and Narssarssuaq in the south; helicopter services between towns on the west coast; fleet of seven S-61N, two S-58T, three Bell 212, three Bell 206B, three Bell 240B, two DHC-6 and two DHC-7; Pres. FINLAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Finland lies in northern Europe, bordered in the far north by Norway and in the north-west by Sweden. The U.S.S.R. adjoins the whole of the eastern frontier. Finland's western and southern shores are washed by the Baltic. The climate varies sharply, with warm summers and cold winters. The mean annual temperature is 5°C (41°F) in Helsinki and -0.4°C (31°F) in the far north. There are two official languages; 93.2 per cent of the population speak Finnish and 6.6 per cent speak Swedish. Finnish is a member of the small Finno-Ugrian group of languages which includes Hungarian. There is a small Lapp population in the north. Over 90 per cent of the people belong to the Evangelical Lutheran Church. The Orthodox Church has the status of a second national church, and there are small groups of Roman Catholics, Methodists, Jews and other religious groups. The national flag (proportions 18 by 11) is white with an azure blue cross (the upright to the left of centre). The state flag has, at the centre of the cross, the national coat of arms. The capital is Helsinki.

Recent History

Finland ceded 10 per cent of its territory and paid very large reparations to the Soviet Union, with which it had been in conflict, at the close of the Second World War. In 1948 Finland and the U.S.S.R. signed the Finno-Soviet Pact of Friendship, which was extended for 20 years from 1955, when the U.S.S.R. relinquished its military post on the Porkkala promontory, and for a further 20 years in 1970. It remains the cornerstone of Finnish foreign policy, which is one of neutrality in foreign affairs. In January 1980 Finland abstained from voting on the UN resolution calling for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Finland's trade agreement with the European Economic Community (EEC) and the European Coal and Steel Community, signed in October 1973, was followed by the signing of a 15-year trade agreement with the Soviet Union in May 1977. Finland joined the United Nations and the Nordic Council in 1955, and became an associate member of EFTA in 1961.

In 64 years of independence, Finland has had over 60 cabinets, including 20 minority coalitions. Political instability has been characterized by a succession of caretaker governments and premature elections. A five-party coalition, the Government of National Emergency, led by Martti Miettunen (Centre Party), was formed in November 1975, but friction over economic policy led to its dissolution in September 1976. Miettunen then reluctantly agreed to lead a new three-party minority coalition, excluding the Social Democrats and Communists, to carry through measures intended to overcome the country's economic crisis. In May 1977 this minority coalition resigned, after the President had urged the parties to form a majority government, and a new five-party cabinet was formed by Kalevi Sorsa, former Prime Minister and leader of the Social Democratic Party. Sorsa embarked on a plan to stimulate domestic demand by assisting private business through tax relief and thereby to combat Finland's growing unemployment.

In February 1978 the Finnish markka was devalued for the third time within a year, in line with a devaluation of the Norwegian currency. Disagreements within the Cabinet over the extent of the devaluation resulted in the resignation of the Government. The majority coalition was reformed under Sorsa in March, with the exception of the Swedish People's Party, the fifth member of the previous government. The new four-party Cabinet faced dissent from the unions over the effects of the devaluation, with the threat of a general strike. Measures taken by the Government to appease opposition included the implementation of a 1.5 per cent pay rise which had been due in January 1979, and some relaxation of the policy of financial stringency. Following general elections in March 1979 in which the conservative opposition gained significant support, a new centre-left coalition Government was formed by Dr. Mauno Koivisto, a Social Democratic economist, ex-Premier and former Governor of the Bank of Finland. With substantial parliamentary support, his four-party Government has continued successfully to pursue deflationary economic policies, although cabinet crises arose in April 1981 and again in September because of disagreements over social welfare policy and budgetary matters.

In September 1981 the 81-year-old President, Dr. Urho Kekkonen, who had held office since 1956, became ill, and his duties were temporarily assumed by the Prime Minister. Dr. Kekkonen resigned in October, and presidential elections were arranged for January 1982, for which Dr. Koivisto was selected as the Social Democrats' candidate. The other candidates were to include Harri Holkeri (National Coalition Party), Dr. Johannes Virolainen (Centre Party) and Kalevi Kivistö (People's Democratic League).

Government

Finland has a republican constitution which combines a parliamentary system with a strong presidency. The unicameral Parliament (Eduskunta) has 200 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution by the President), using proportional representation. The President, entrusted with supreme executive power, is elected for six years by a college of 300 electors, chosen by popular vote in the same manner as members of Parliament. Legislative power is exercised by Parliament in conjunction with the President. For general administration the President appoints a Council of State (Cabinet), headed by a Prime Minister, which is responsible to Parliament. Finland has 12 provinces, each administered by an appointed Governor.

Defence

The armed forces of Finland are restricted by treaty to 41,900, and in July 1981 numbered 39,900, of whom 27,900 were conscripts serving up to 11 months. The defence budget for 1981 was 2,874 million markkaa. Armed forces in that year comprised army 34,400, navy 2,500, and air force 3,000. There were also 700,000 reserves and 4,000 frontier guards.

Economic Affairs

Forests cover about three-fifths of Finland's land area and the country is one of the world's leading exporters of pulp and paper, although in recent years this industry has been affected by foreign trade cycles and rising fuel prices. Finland relies heavily on imported petroleum, mainly from the U.S.S.R. Among the manufacturing industries, the textile and chemical industries in particular have grown, but the expanding metal and engineering industries have recently suffered from a lack of capacity and skilled labour. The manufacture of furniture and other consumer durables is also important. Cereal and dairy farming are highly mechanized.

In 1977 Finland experienced a period of recession for the third successive year, due to the widespread decline in home demand. There was a series of damaging strikes at the beginning of the year, followed by a wage settlement that was far from moderate. Unemployment rose drastically in 1977; it was at a peak in the first quarter of 1978, when there were 189,000 unemployed, nearly 9 per cent of the labour force, but was reduced to 6 per cent in 1979 and 1980, falling to 5 per cent in the latter half of 1981.

Since 1976 the central bank has followed an unyieldingly tight credit policy, checking escalation in foreign debt. The total devaluation of the markka by 16 per cent since April 1977 led to a trade surplus in 1978 of 2,800 million markkaa. Inflation was also checked, and remained at 7.6 per cent in 1978. The 1979 budget was cautiously refationary, in line with measures taken in 1978 such as tax concessions for investment. These measures led to an excellent economic recovery in 1979, prompting an unprecedented 3 per cent revaluation of the markka. G.D.P. increased by 7 per cent in 1979, and by 6 per cent in 1980, although the vulnerability of Finland's economy to movements in international trade and any worsening of the world energy crisis was expected to limit G.D.P. growth to under 2 per cent in 1981.

In May 1980 the Government announced deflationary measures, including a cut in public sector spending, but these measures were generally considered to be too limited, partly in view of the rise in wages and retail prices by 12 and 11 per cent respectively. Wage settlements in 1981 were expected to add 12 per cent to manufacturing costs, with retail prices forecast to rise by 10 per cent. In addition to the maintenance of Finland's present balance between monetary controls and contained unemployment, short-term economic prospects depend in part on continued political stability.

A trade agreement between Finland and the EEC came into effect in January 1974, under which tariffs were reduced in stages, leading to their abolition on most goods in 1977. In recent years EEC and EFTA countries have accounted for nearly 70 per cent of Finland's total trade turnover.

Transport and Communications

There are 6,087 km. of railways which provide connections with Sweden and the Soviet Union. At the end of 1980 there were 74,960 km. of roads and development of road traffic has grown rapidly. Extensive use is made of the canals which connect Finland's innumerable lakes; inland waterways are navigable by ships for 6,600 km. Most of Finland's external freight and passenger traffic goes by sea, so that in winter water communications are restricted by the severe frost. However, ice-breakers are used to open up channels for commercial traffic.

Social Welfare

Social policy covers social security (national pensions, disability insurance, sickness insurance), social assistance (maternity, child, housing, education and other allowances and accident compensation) and social welfare (care of children, the aged, disabled and maladjusted, including residential services). Sickness insurance covers a considerable part of the costs of medical care outside hospital and the general hospitals charge moderate fees. The National Health Act of 1972 provided for the establishment of health centres in every municipality, and the abolition of doctor's fees.

Education

Compulsory education was introduced in 1921. By the 1977/78 school year, the whole country had transferred to a new comprehensive education system. Tuition is free and instruction is the same for all students. The compulsory course is divided into a 6-year lower level and a 3-year upper level. After completing compulsory education the pupil may transfer to an upper secondary school or other vocational school or institute for three years. At the end of this time a student takes a matriculation examination which, if passed, entitles him to seek admission at one of the 22 universities and colleges of further education in Finland.

Tourism

Vast forests, Europe's largest inland water system, magnificent unspoilt scenery and the possibility of holiday seclusion are the chief attractions for the visitor to Finland. The winter sports season is long. The number of tourists visiting Finland has increased substantially since 1968, with most visitors coming from other Scandinavian countries, the Germans and Americans being second and third. Tourists receipts rose by 15 per cent to over 2,000 million markkaa in 1979.

Public Holidays

1982: April 9th (Good Friday), April 12th (Easter Monday), May 1st (May Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), June 25th (Midsummer Day, Flag Day), November 6th (All Saints' Day), December 6th (Independence Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1982: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 8th (for Epiphany).

THE CONSTITUTION

(adopted on July 17th, 1919)

Summary

The Constitution Act of 1919 laid down that: "The sovereign power in Finland rests with the people, represented by their delegates assembled in Parliament. Legislative power shall be exercised by Parliament in conjunction with the President of the Republic. The supreme executive power is vested in the President of the Republic. In addition to the President there shall be for the general government of the State a Council of State consisting of a Prime Minister and the necessary number of ministers."

THE PRESIDENT

The President is elected for a term of six years by 300 electors. The electors are chosen by public vote in the same manner as members of the Parliament.

The President of the Republic is entrusted with supreme Executive power. He makes his decisions known in Cabinet meetings on the basis of the recommendation of the Cabinet minister responsible for the matter. The President has the right to depart even from a unanimous opinion reached by the Cabinet. Legislative power is exercised by the Parliament in conjunction with the President. Both the President and the Parliament have the right of initiative in legislation. Laws passed by the Parliament are submitted to the President, who has the right of veto. If the President has not within three months assented to a law, this is tantamount to a refusal of his assent. A law to which the President has not given his assent will nevertheless come into force, if the Parliament elected at the next general election adopts it without alteration.

The President has also the right to issue decrees in certain events, to order new elections to the Parliament, to grant pardons and dispensations, and to grant Finnish citizenship to foreigners.

The President's approval is necessary in all matters concerning the relations of Finland with foreign countries, and he is Supreme Commander of the Defence Forces of the Republic.

Such decisions as are arrived at by the President are made by him in the Council of State, except in matters pertaining to military functions and appointments.

GOVERNMENT

For the general administration of the country there is a Council of State, appointed by the President, and composed of the Prime Minister and the Ministers of the various Ministries. The members of the Council, who must enjoy the confidence of the Parliament, are collectively responsible to it for their conduct of affairs, and for the general policy of the administration; while each member is responsible for the administration of his own Ministry.

To this Council or Cabinet the President can appoint supernumerary Ministers, who serve either as assistant Ministers or as Ministers without portfolio. The President also appoints a Chancellor of Justice, who must see that the Council and its members act within the law. If in his opinion the Council of State or an individual Minister has acted in a manner contrary to the law, the Chancellor of Justice must report the matter to the President of the Republic or in certain cases to the Parliament. In this way

Ministers are rendered legally as well as politically responsible for their official acts.

THE PARLIAMENT

The Parliament is an assembly of one chamber with 200 members elected for four years by universal suffrage on a system of proportional representation, every man and woman who is eighteen or over being entitled to vote and everyone over twenty being eligible. It assembles annually on the 1st of February. The ordinary duration of a session is 120 days, but the Parliament can at its pleasure extend or shorten its session. The opposition of one-third of the members can cause ordinary legislative proposals to be deferred till after the next elections. Discussion of questions relating to the constitutional laws belongs also to Parliament, but for the settlement of such questions certain delaying conditions (fixed majorities) are prescribed. The Parliament, besides taking part in legislation, has the right to determine the estimates, which, though not technically a law, are published as a law.

Furthermore, the Parliament has the right, in a large measure to supervise the administration of the Government. For this purpose it receives special reports, the Government also submitting an account of its administration every year, and a special account of the administration of national finances. The Chancellor of Justice submits a yearly report on the administration of the Council of State. The Parliament elects five auditors, who submit to it annual reports of their work; to see that the estimates have been adhered to. The Parliament also appoints every four years a Parliamentary Ombudsman (Judicial Delegate of Parliament), who submits to it a report, to supervise the observance of the laws.

The Parliament has the right to interrogate the Government. It can impeach a member of the Council of State or the Chancellor of Justice for not having conformed to the law in the discharge of his duties. Trials are conducted at a special court, known as the Court of the Realm, of 13 members, six of whom are elected by Parliament for a term of four years.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

The first report of the Constitutional Committee on possible reforms of the fundamental laws was presented in April 1974. The multi-party system and the constitutional checks on revision of the fundamental laws are likely to delay any major changes until the 1980s, but several issues have emerged as potential areas for reform. Generally, the right-wing parties are suspicious of reform, but the left has won some support from the centre.

Three main topics have been discussed by the Committee: the respective powers of the President, Cabinet and Parliament; legislative procedure, particularly the strength of the protection to be given to parliamentary minorities; the basic economic, social and cultural rights of the individual and security of ownership. The Committee has also recommended the implementation of employee participation in decision-making. The most basic reform under discussion is the left's proposal that Parliament should be the supreme state organ, and that much of the President's power should be transferred to the Cabinet.

THE PRESS

The 1919 Constitution provided safeguards for press freedom in Finland, and in the same year the Freedom of the Press Act developed and qualified this principle by defining the rights and responsibilities of editors and the circumstances in which the Supreme Court may confiscate or suppress a publication. In practice there are few restrictions. The most notable offences for newspapermen concern libel and copyright. Two notable features of the press are the public's legal right of access to all official documents (with important exceptions), and since 1966

FINLAND

The Press

the right of the journalist to conceal his source of news.

Almost all daily newspapers are independent companies, most of which are owned by large numbers of shareholders. Newspaper chains are virtually unknown, but the Finnish press is a party press. The political alignment of the Finnish daily press was as follows in 1978:

	Number	Circulation (%)
Independent	49	58.9
Centre and right-wing	22	29.1

The small number of papers which are generally considered left-oriented are usually owned by the political parties concerned, by trade unions, or by other workers' associations (the Social Democratic Party's chief organ is Suomen Sosialidemokraatti; and the Finnish Communist Party publishes Kansan Uutiset). On the other hand most of the right-wing newspapers are owned by private shareholders. Some even belong to private endowments. The leading organ of the National Coalition Party is Aamulehti in Tampere. The left-wing papers are subject to considerably closer influence from the parties to which they are affiliated than their right-wing counterparts. Privately owned newspapers—including some of the largest such as Helsingin Sanomat and Turun Sanomat—are usually independent of political parties. The number of votes cast in elections bears little relation to the respective circulation totals of affiliated newspapers.

Helsinki is the only large press centre, with a large number of daily papers. Several large dailies are produced in provincial towns, as are a number of weekly and twice-weekly papers. In 1981 there were 94 daily newspapers in Finland with a total circulation of about 2,650,000. Twelve of these dailies are printed in Swedish. A further 148 small local non-daily papers were also registered in 1981.

In order of circulation the most popular daily papers are: Helsingin Sanomat, Aamulehti, Turun Sanomat, Ilta-Sanomat, Uusi Suomi, Savon Sanomat and Hufvudstadsbladet. Those most respected for their standard of news coverage and commentary are Helsingin Sanomat, an independent paper, and the smaller Uusi Suomi.

The total circulation of periodicals amounts to about 21 million copies per issue, of which the business and trade press contribute 11.5 million. The largest publishers are Kustannusosakeyhtiö Apulehti, Yhtyneet Kuvalehdet Oy, Lehtimiehet Oy and Sanoma Osakeyhtiö. Consumer co-operatives use their periodicals as information media for both their members and their customers. Pirkka, YV, Me and Yhteishyvä are among the most important.

There are about 1,040 periodicals of which some 200 are in the nation's second language, Swedish. Among the leading weekly periodicals are the general interest Seura (312,118), Apu (294,737) and the illustrated news magazine Suomen Kuvalehti (127,736). The publications of the consumer co-operatives enjoy large circulations (Pirkka, the largest, has a circulation of 1,183,519), as do the chief women's magazines Anna (150,095), Me naiset (134,591) and Kotiliesi (215,590) (1981 circulations). The more popular serious magazines include the fortnightly Pellervo (100,867) specializing in agricultural affairs, and Valitut Palat, the Finnish Reader's Digest (280,603).

FINANCE

The Bank of Finland is the Bank of Issue under the guarantee and supervision of Parliament. Its Board of Management is appointed by the President of the Republic and the nine Bank Supervisors are elected by Parliament.

The Bank of Finland has very close connections with the central banks of the other Nordic countries and in 1962 an agreement was signed on short-term credits between these countries.

At the end of 1980 there were two large and five small commercial banks with 884 offices in the country, and 275 savings banks with 1,029 branch offices.

An important part is played in the financial activities of the country by Co-operative banks. In 1980 there were 372 Co-operative banks and five mortgage banks. The savings departments of all co-operative stores accept deposits from the public.

The Postipankki is also extremely important in the life of the country. It collects small savings from the public through the 3,181 local post offices, the 13 offices of the Bank of Finland, as well as through its own head office and 30 branches. The National Pension Institute and 59 private insurance companies also granted credits in 1980.

STATE OWNED INDUSTRIES

There has never been any government policy in Finland to nationalize industries. Occasionally, however, it has been found necessary for various reasons to give substantial state aid in setting up a company and the state has retained a majority of shares in these companies. All are administered as limited companies, the state being represented on the Board of Management and at the General Meeting of Shareholders by either the relevant Minister or an official of the relevant Ministry.

FRANCE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The French Republic is situated in Western Europe and bounded to the north by the English Channel, to the east by Belgium, Luxembourg, the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland and Italy, to the south by the Mediterranean and Spain and to the west by the Atlantic Ocean. The island of Corsica is part of France, while five overseas departments and five overseas territories also form an integral part of the Republic. Climate is temperate throughout most of the country but in the south it is of the Mediterranean type with warm summers and mild winters. The principal language is French, which has numerous regional dialects, and small minorities speak Breton or Basque. About 90 per cent of the population are Roman Catholics. There are also other Christian, Muslim and Jewish communities. The national flag (proportions three by two) carries three equal vertical bands of blue, white and red. The capital is Paris.

Recent History

When the Fourth Republic came to an end in 1958 with an insurrection in Algeria (then an overseas department) and the threat of civil war, Gen. Charles de Gaulle was invited by President Coty to form a government, and was invested as Prime Minister to rule by decree for six months. A new constitution was approved by referendum in September 1958 and promulgated in October; thus the Fifth Republic came into being, with de Gaulle as its President. The new system provided a strong, stable executive. Real power rested in the hands of the President, who strengthened his authority through direct appeals to the people in national referenda.

The early years of the Fifth Republic were overshadowed by the Algerian crisis. De Gaulle put down a revolt of French army officers and granted Algeria independence in 1962, withdrawing troops and repatriating French settlers. A period of relative tranquillity was ended in 1968 when dissatisfaction with the government's authoritarian policies on education and information, coupled with discontent at low wage rates and lack of social reform, fused into a serious revolt of students and workers. For a month the republic was threatened, but the student movement collapsed and the general strike was settled by large wage rises. In April 1969 de Gaulle resigned after defeat in a referendum on regional reform.

Georges Pompidou was elected President in June 1969. He attempted to continue Gaullism, while also responding to the desire for change manifested in 1968. The Gaullist hold on power was threatened, however, by the Union of the Left, an alliance of the Socialist and Communist parties, who had drawn up a common programme of government. In the 1973 general election the Government coalition was returned with a reduced majority.

President Pompidou died in April 1974. Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, formerly leader of the Républicains Indépendants (RI), supported by the Gaullist Union des Démocrates pour la République (UDR) and the centre parties, was elected in May after a close struggle with François Mitterrand, leader of the Socialist party and candidate of the Union of the Left. A government was formed from members of the RI, the UDR and the Centre parties. In August 1976 Jacques Chirac resigned as Prime Minister and was replaced by Raymond Barre, hitherto Minister of External Trade. Chirac undertook the transformation of the UDR into a new Gaullist party, the Rassemblement pour la République (RPR).

During the run-up to the National Assembly elections of March 1978 the non-Gaullist parties in the Government formed the Union pour la Démocratie Française (UDF), a move which angered the RPR and brought the announcement that RPR candidates would stand against the UDF; the second ballot gave the Government parties a comfortable working majority. President Giscard d'Estaing was able to demonstrate a conciliatory attitude towards the left in unprecedented consultations on his policy of "broader national union" with Communist and Socialist leaders (who had abandoned the Union of the Left).

The escalation of violence by extreme left- and right-wing groups, including attacks on immigrant workers and Jews, has remained a serious problem in recent years, as have the sporadic bomb attacks by groups demanding autonomy for Corsica, Brittany and the Basque country.

In the April/May 1981 presidential elections, François Mitterrand defeated Giscard d'Estaing, gaining nearly 52 per cent of the votes in the second ballot. He appointed Pierre Mauroy, former Mayor of Lille, to be Prime Minister and dissolved the National Assembly. Legislative elections were held in June and the Socialists won a landslide victory, aided by the Communist vote. Four Communist ministers were included in the first left-wing government for 23 years. President Mitterrand announced a series of sweeping social reforms and nationalizations (see Economic Affairs) and a programme of decentralization, including a special statute giving a degree of autonomy to Corsica.

Under de Gaulle, France became a nuclear power and withdrew from the command structure of NATO in 1966. Pompidou maintained this independent foreign policy, although he did not share de Gaulle's hostility to the United Kingdom and the U.S.A. Giscard d'Estaing took still further the reconciliation with the U.S.A., but continued to develop France's independent nuclear deterrent, as President Mitterrand announced he would do; it is based on massive retaliation rather than flexible response. Amid much controversy, France's neutron bomb was perfected and successfully tested in June 1980. France is a founder-member of the European Communities.

France granted independence to most of its former colonies after the Second World War. In Indo-China, after prolonged fighting, Laos, Cambodia (now Kampuchea) and Viet-Nam became fully independent in 1954. In Africa most of the French colonies in the West and Equatorial regions attained independence in 1960 but have retained their close economic and political ties with France. Guerrilla and civil warfare in ex-colonies have involved French troops in recent years as peace-keeping forces.

Government

Under the 1958 constitution, legislative power is held by the bicameral Parliament, comprising a Senate and a National Assembly. The Senate has 304 members (285 for metropolitan France, 13 for the overseas departments and territories and six for French nationals abroad) indirectly elected for nine years, one third of the seats being renewable every three years. The Senate is due to increase to 316 members in 1983. The National Assembly has 491 members (474 for metropolitan France and 17 for overseas departments) directly elected by universal adult suffrage (using two ballots if necessary) for five years, subject to dissolution.

Executive power is held by the President. Since 1962 the President has been directly elected by popular vote (using two ballots if necessary) for seven years. The President appoints a Council of Ministers, headed by the Prime Minister, which administers the country and is responsible to Parliament.

Metropolitan France comprises 21 administrative regions containing 96 departments. There are also five overseas departments (French Guiana, Guadeloupe, Martinique, Réunion and St. Pierre and Miquelon) and five overseas territories (the French Southern and Antarctic Territories, French Polynesia, Mayotte, New Caledonia and the Wallis and Futuna Islands) which are integral parts of the French Republic. Each department is administered by an appointed Prefect and each territory by an appointed Governor.

Defence

French military policy is decided by the Supreme Defence Council. Military service is compulsory and lasts for 12–18 months. In July 1981 the strength of the armed forces stood at 504,630, comprising: army 321,320, navy 69,600, air force 103,460, and 10,250 on inter-service central staff. The defence budget for 1981 totalled 104,440 million francs. France is a member of NATO, but withdrew from its integrated military organization in 1966.

Economic Affairs

The rapid growth of the French economy since the Second World War has been directed by a series of Plans, the seventh of which came into effect in 1976. An interim plan (1982–84) was to be announced in late 1981. Elaborated by Planning Commissions under the supervision of the Commissariat Général du Plan, the Plans lay down guidelines for economic development in terms both of precise production targets and of general social objectives.

France is still West Europe's leading agricultural nation, with 32 million hectares, nearly 60 per cent of its area, used for farming; the population engaged in agriculture, however, declined as a proportion of the total labour force from 15 per cent in 1968 to 8.4 per cent in 1980. Co-operatives are very common in both supply and sales of most sectors, accounting for between a third and a half of all business. The share of animal products in total agricultural production is over 50 per cent. After intensive state-assisted marketing efforts, there was a record trade surplus in the agricultural sector of 17,000 million francs in 1980, compared with a deficit of 3,300 million in 1977. Agriculture accounted for about 16 per cent of total exports in 1980: the chief items were cereals, sugar, dairy produce, wine and livestock.

Since the Second World War French industry has expanded extremely rapidly. During 1970–80 industrial production increased by 33 per cent, in spite of a fall in 1975 due to the world recession. In 1979 it increased by 3.3 per cent, but there was no growth in 1980. The largest French industries are steel, motor vehicles, aircraft, mechanical and electrical engineering, textiles, chemicals and food processing. In September 1978 the Government initiated a rescue plan for the ailing steel industry which involved a take-over of a portion of the debts by the public sector and by banks, which in return became the industry's majority shareholders, and the closing down of unprofitable units, involving drastic manpower reductions.

France has greatly increased its exports in recent years, being the world's fifth largest exporter in 1980, although heavy visible trade deficits of 10,000 million francs in 1979 and 50,000 million in 1980 reflected increases in the price of imported fuel, on which France depends, and a decline in the country's non-oil surplus as well as in the home market. Its principal trade partners are the other members of the European Economic Community, especially the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium and Italy. Energetic government action has helped win France a substantial share of the expanding Middle East export market.

G.D.P. increased by 3.3 per cent in 1978, by 3.4 per cent in 1979, and by only 1.1 per cent in 1980. A policy laid down by the Ministry of Industry in 1980 aims to reduce France's dependence on petroleum to a third of its requirements by 1990, with the development of nuclear energy and natural sources such as solar and geothermic energy. Imports of crude oil fell by 12.5 per cent in 1980. Government action has concentrated on relieving the effects of the recession in particularly depressed sectors and holding inflation by controlling prices. The rate of inflation was 11.8 per cent in 1979 and 13.8 per cent in 1980. Unemployment is becoming an increasingly sensitive social and political issue in France; a total of 1,822,000 members (about 8 per cent) of the workforce were unemployed in June 1981, despite various government schemes to overcome the problem.

In 1978 the Government adopted an economic strategy which amounted to a determined reversal of the French tradition of state dirigisme, and an exposure of French industry to outside competition. Nationalized industries raised their prices to achieve solvency, and price controls were lifted on whole series of commodities. Such policies caused a sharp rise in the cost of living, and many small firms went out of business. In 1981 President Mitterrand announced plans to nationalize 36 banks and nine key industrial groups, and a series of social measures, such as higher minimum wages and bigger welfare allowances, to be funded by new taxes on the higher income brackets. Special measures were also taken to protect the franc (which had fallen to its lowest level against the U.S. dollar for over 20 years) and to shield the economy from the effects of high interest rates and the recession.

Transport and Communications

There are 37,143 kilometres of railway lines and French trains hold world records for speed; in October 1980 the first train à grande vitesse (T.G.V.) ran between Paris and Lyon and a regular service was due to begin in late 1981. In 1980 there were 1,521,351 kilometres of highway, 100 centimes=1 French franc.

FINANCE

Coins: 1, 5, 10, 20 and 50 centimes; 1, 2, 5 and 10 francs.

Notes: 10, 50, 100 and 500 francs.

Exchange rates (October 1981): £1 sterling=10.39 francs; U.S. $1=5.56 francs.

100 French francs=£9.62=$17.98.

Note: Between January 1960 and August 1969 the par value of the French franc was 180 milligrammes of gold, equal to 20.255 U.S. cents (U.S. $1=4.937 francs). In August 1969 the franc was devalued to 160 milligrammes of gold, the official exchange rate being U.S. $1=5.554 francs until August 1971. From December 1971 to February 1973 the rate was U.S. $1=5.116 francs. Since March 1973 the French authorities have ceased to maintain the franc-dollar rate within previously agreed margins and the franc has been allowed to "float". The average exchange rate (francs per U.S. dollar) was: 4.4540 in 1973; 4.8099 in 1974; 4.2864 in 1975; 4.7796 in 1976; 4.9134 in 1977; 4.5128 in 1978; 4.2545 in 1979; 4.2260 in 1980. In terms of sterling, the central exchange rate between August 1969 and June 1972 was £1=13.330 francs.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE FIFTH REPUBLIC

Preamble

The French people hereby solemnly proclaims its attachment to the Rights of Man and to the principles of national sovereignty as defined by the Declaration of 1789, confirmed and complemented by the Preamble of the Constitution of 1946.

By virtue of these principles and that of the free determination of peoples, the Republic hereby offers to the Overseas Territories that express the desire to adhere to them, new institutions based on the common ideal of liberty, equality and fraternity and conceived with a view to their democratic evolution.

Article 1. The Republic and the peoples of the Overseas Territories who, by an act of free determination, adopt the present Constitution thereby institute a Community.

The Community shall be based on the equality and the solidarity of the peoples composing it.

Chapter I.—On Sovereignty

Article 2. France shall be a Republic, indivisible, secular, democratic and social. It shall ensure the equality of all citizens before the law, without distinction of origin, race or religion. It shall respect all beliefs.

The national emblem shall be the tricolour flag, blue, white and red.

The national anthem shall be the "Marseillaise".

The motto of the Republic shall be "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity".

Its principle shall be government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Article 3. National sovereignty belongs to the people, which shall exercise this sovereignty through its representatives and through the referendum.

No section of the people, nor any individual, may attribute to themselves or himself the exercise thereof.

Suffrage may be direct or indirect under the conditions stipulated by the Constitution. It shall always be universal, equal and secret.

All French citizens of both sexes who have reached their majority and who enjoy civil and political rights may vote under the conditions to be determined by law.

Article 4. Political parties and groups may compete for votes. They may form and carry on their activities freely. They must respect the principles of national sovereignty and of democracy.

Chapter II.—The President of the Republic

Article 5. The President of the Republic shall see that the Constitution is respected. He shall ensure, by his arbitration, the regular functioning of the public powers, as well as the continuity of the State.

He shall be the guarantor of national independence, of the integrity of the territory, and of respect for Community agreements and for treaties.

Article 6. The President of the Republic shall be elected for seven years by direct universal suffrage. The method of implementation of the present article shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 7. The President of the Republic shall be elected by an absolute majority of the votes cast. If such a majority is not obtained at the first ballot, a second ballot shall take place on the second following Sunday. Those who may stand for the second ballot shall be only the two candidates who, after the possible withdrawal of candidates with more votes, have gained the largest number of votes on the first ballot.

Voting shall begin at the summons of the Government. The election of the new President of the Republic shall take place not less than twenty days and not more than thirty-five days before the expiration of the powers of the President in office. In the event that the Presidency of the Republic has been vacated for any reason whatsoever, or impeded in its functioning as officially declared by the Constitutional Council, after the matter has been referred to it by the Government and which shall give its ruling by an absolute majority of its members, the functions of the President of the Republic, with the exception of those covered by Articles 11 and 12 hereunder, shall be temporarily exercised by the President of the Senate and, if the latter is in his turn unable to exercise his functions, by the Government.

In the case of vacancy or when the impediment is declared to be final by the Constitutional Council, the voting for the election of the new President shall take place, except in case of force majeure officially noted by the Constitutional Council, not less than twenty days and not more than thirty-five days after the beginning of the vacancy or of the declaration of the final nature of the impediment.

If, in the seven days preceding the latest date for the lodging of candidatures, one of the persons who, at least thirty days prior to that date, publicly announced his decision to be a candidate dies or is impeded, the Constitutional Council can decide to postpone the election.

If, before the first ballot, one of the candidates dies or is impeded, the Constitutional Council orders the postponement of the election.

In the event of the death or impediment, before any candidates have withdrawn, of one of the two candidates who received the greatest number of votes in the first ballot, the Constitutional Council shall declare that the electoral procedure must be repeated in full; the same shall apply in the event of the death or impediment of one of the two candidates standing for the second ballot.

All cases shall be referred to the Constitutional Council under the conditions laid down in paragraph 2 of article 61 below, or under those determined for the presentation of candidates by the organic law provided for in article 6 above.

The Constitutional Council can extend the periods stipulated in paragraphs 3 and 5 above provided that polling shall not take place more than thirty-five days after the date of the decision of the Constitutional Council. If the implementation of the provisions of this paragraph results in the postponement of the election beyond the expiry of the powers of the President in office, the latter shall remain in office until his successor is proclaimed.

Articles 49 and 50 and Article 89 of the Constitution may not be put into application during the vacancy of the Presidency of the Republic or during the period between the declaration of the final nature of the impediment of the President of the Republic and the election of his successor.

Article 8. The President of the Republic shall appoint the Premier. He shall terminate the functions of the Premier when the latter presents the resignation of the Government.

At the suggestion of the Premier, he shall appoint the other members of the Government and shall terminate their functions.

Article 9. The President of the Republic shall preside over the Council of Ministers.

Article 10. The President of the Republic shall promulgate the laws within fifteen days following the transmission to the Government of the finally adopted law.

He may, before the expiration of this time limit, ask Parliament for a reconsideration of the law or of certain of its articles. This reconsideration may not be refused.

Article 11. The President of the Republic, on the proposal of the Government during [Parliamentary] sessions, or on joint motion of the two Assemblies published in the Journal Officiel, may submit to a referendum any bill dealing with the organization of the public powers, entailing approval of a Community agreement, or providing for authorization to ratify a treaty that, without being contrary to the Constitution, might affect the functioning of the institutions.

When the referendum decides in favour of the bill, the President of the Republic shall promulgate it within the time limit stipulated in the preceding article.

Article 12. The President of the Republic may, after consultation with the Premier and the Presidents of the Assemblies, declare the dissolution of the National Assembly.

General elections shall take place twenty days at the least and forty days at the most after the dissolution.

The National Assembly shall convene by right on the second Thursday following its election. If this meeting takes place between the periods provided for ordinary sessions, a session shall, by right, be opened for a fifteen-day period.

There may be no further dissolution within a year following these elections.

Article 13. The President of the Republic shall sign the ordinances and decrees decided upon in the Council of Ministers.

He shall make appointments to the civil and military posts of the State.

Councillors of State, the Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, Ambassadors and Envoys Extraordinary, Master Councillors of the Audit Office, prefects, representatives of the Government in the Overseas Territories, general officers, rectors of academies [regional divisions of the public educational system] and directors of central administrations shall be appointed in meetings of the Council of Ministers.

An organic law shall determine the other posts to be filled in meetings of the Council of Ministers, as well as the conditions under which the power of the President of the Republic to make appointments to office may be delegated by him to be exercised in his name.

Article 14. The President of the Republic shall accredit Ambassadors and Envoys Extraordinary to foreign powers; foreign Ambassadors and Envoys Extraordinary shall be accredited to him.

Article 15. The President of the Republic shall be commander of the armed forces. He shall preside over the higher councils and committees of national defence.

Article 16. When the institutions of the Republic, the independence of the nation, the integrity of its territory or the fulfilment of its international commitments are threatened in a grave and immediate manner and the regular functioning of the constitutional public powers is interrupted, the President of the Republic shall take the measures required by these circumstances, after official consultation with the Premier and the Presidents of the Assemblies, as well as with the Constitutional Council.

He shall inform the nation of these measures in a message.

These measures must be prompted by the desire to ensure to the constitutional public powers, in the shortest possible time, the means of accomplishing their mission. The Constitutional Council shall be consulted with regard to such measures.

Parliament shall meet by right.

The National Assembly may not be dissolved during the exercise of exceptional powers.

Article 17. The President of the Republic shall have the right of pardon.

Article 18. The President of the Republic shall communicate with the two Assemblies of Parliament by means of messages, which he shall cause to be read, and which shall not be the occasion for any debate.

Between sessions, the Parliament shall be convened especially to this end.

Article 19. The acts of the President of the Republic, other than those provided for under Articles 8 (first paragraph), 11, 12, 16, 18, 54, 56 and 61, shall be countersigned by the Premier and, should circumstances so require, by the appropriate ministers.

Chapter III.—The Government

Article 20. The Government shall determine and conduct the policy of the nation.

It shall have at its disposal the administration and the armed forces.

It shall be responsible to the Parliament under the conditions and according to the procedures stipulated in Articles 49 and 50.

Article 21. The Premier shall direct the operation of the Government. He shall be responsible for national defence. He shall ensure the execution of the laws. Subject to the provisions of Article 13, he shall have regulatory powers and shall make appointments to civil and military posts.

He may delegate certain of his powers to the ministers.

He shall replace, should the occasion arise, the President of the Republic as the Chairman of the councils and committees provided for under Article 15.

He may, in exceptional instances, replace him as the chairman of a meeting of the Council of Ministers by virtue of an explicit delegation and for a specific agenda.

Article 22. The acts of the Premier shall be countersigned, when circumstances so require, by the ministers responsible for their execution.

Article 23. The functions of Member of the Government shall be incompatible with the exercise of any parliamentary mandate, with the holding of any office, at the national level, in business, professional or labour organizations, and with any public employment or professional activity.

An organic law shall determine the conditions under which the holders of such mandates, functions or employments shall be replaced.

The replacement of the members of Parliament shall take place in accordance with the provisions of Article 25.

Chapter IV.—The Parliament

Article 24. The Parliament shall comprise the National Assembly and the Senate.

The deputies to the National Assembly shall be elected by direct suffrage.

The Senate shall be elected by indirect suffrage. It shall ensure the representation of the territorial units of the Republic. Frenchmen living outside France shall be represented in the Senate.

Article 25. An organic law shall determine the term for which each Assembly is elected, the number of its members, their emoluments, the conditions of eligibility, and the system of ineligibilities and incompatibilities.

It shall likewise determine the conditions under which, in the case of a vacancy in either Assembly, persons shall be elected to replace the deputy or senator whose seat has been vacated until the holding of new complete or partial elections to the Assembly concerned.

Article 26. No Member of Parliament may be prosecuted, searched for, arrested, detained or tried as a result of the opinions or votes expressed by him in the exercise of his functions.

No Member of Parliament may, during parliamentary session, be prosecuted or arrested for criminal or minor offences without the authorization of the Assembly of which he is a member except in the case of flagrante delicto.

When Parliament is not in session, no Member of Parliament may be arrested without the authorization of the Secretariat of the Assembly of which he is a member, except in the case of flagrante delicto, of authorized prosecution or of final conviction.

The detention or prosecution of a Member of Parliament shall be suspended if the Assembly of which he is a member so demands.

Article 27. Any compulsory vote shall be null and void.

The right to vote of the members of Parliament shall be personal.

The organic law may, under exceptional circumstances, authorize the delegation of a vote. In this case, no member may be delegated more than one vote.

Article 28. Parliament shall convene by right in two ordinary sessions a year.

The first session shall begin on the first Tuesday of October and shall end on the third Friday of December.

The second session shall open on the last Tuesday of April; it may not last longer than three months.

Article 29. Parliament shall convene in extraordinary session at the request of the Premier or of the majority of the members comprising the National Assembly, to consider a specific agenda.

When an extraordinary session is held at the request of the members of the National Assembly, the closure decree shall take effect as soon as the Parliament has exhausted the agenda for which it was called, and at the latest twelve days from the date of its meeting.

Only the Premier may ask for a new session before the end of the month following the closure decree.

Article 30. Apart from cases in which Parliament meets by right, extraordinary sessions shall be opened and closed by decree of the President of the Republic.

Article 31. The members of the Government shall have access to the two Assemblies. They shall be heard when they so request.

They may call for the assistance of Commissioners of the Government.

Article 32. The President of the National Assembly shall be elected for the duration of the legislature. The President of the Senate shall be elected after each partial re-election [of the Senate].

Article 33. The meetings of the two Assemblies shall be public. An in extenso report of the debates shall be published in the Journal Officiel.

Each Assembly may sit in secret committee at the request of the Premier or of one-tenth of its members.

Chapter V.—On Relations Between Parliament and the Government

Article 34. Laws shall be voted by Parliament.

They shall establish the regulations concerning:

Civil rights and the fundamental guarantees granted to the citizens for the exercise of their public liberties; the obligations imposed by the national defence upon the person and property of citizens;

Nationality, status and legal capacity of persons; marriage contracts, inheritance and gifts;

Determination of crimes and misdemeanours as well as the penalties imposed therefor; criminal procedure; amnesty; the creation of new juridical systems and the status of magistrates;

The basis, the rate and the methods of collecting taxes of all types; the issue of currency.

They likewise shall determine the regulations concerning:

The electoral system of the Parliamentary Assemblies and the local assemblies;

The establishment of categories of public institutions;

The fundamental guarantees granted to civil and military personnel employed by the State;

The nationalization of enterprises and the transfers of the property of enterprises from the public to the private sector.

Laws shall determine the fundamental principles of:

The general organization of national defence;

The free administration of local communities, of their competencies and their resources;

Education;

Property rights, civil and commercial obligations;

Legislation pertaining to employment unions and social security.

The financial laws shall determine the financial resources and obligations of the State under the conditions and with the reservations to be provided for by an organic law.

Laws pertaining to national planning shall determine the objectives of the economic and social action of the State.

The provisions of the present article may be detailed and supplemented by an organic law.

Article 35. Parliament shall authorize the declaration of war.

Article 36. Martial law shall be decreed in a meeting of the Council of Ministers.

Its prorogation beyond twelve days may be authorized only by Parliament.

Article 37. Matters other than those that fall within the domain of law shall be of a regulatory character.

Legislative texts concerning these matters may be modified by decrees issued after consultation with the Council of State. Those legislative texts which shall be passed after the entry into force of the present Constitution shall be modified by decree only if the Constitutional Council has stated that they have a regulatory character as defined in the preceding paragraph.

Article 38. The Government may, in order to carry out its programme, ask Parliament for authorization to take through ordinances, during a limited period, measures that are normally within the domain of law.

The ordinances shall be enacted in meetings of Ministers after consultation with the Council of State. They shall come into force upon their publication but shall become null and void if the bill for their ratification is not submitted to Parliament before the date set by the enabling act.

At the expiration of the time limit referred to in the first paragraph of the present article, the ordinances may be modified only by the law in those matters which are within the legislative domain.

Article 39. The Premier and the Members of Parliament alike shall have the right to initiate legislation.

Government bills shall be discussed in the Council of Ministers after consultation with the Council of State and shall be filed with the secretariat of one of the two Assemblies. Finance bills shall be submitted first to the National Assembly.

Article 40. The bills and amendments introduced by the Members of Parliament shall be inadmissible when their adoption would have as a consequence either a diminution of public financial resources or an increase in public expenditure.

Article 41. If it shall appear in the course of the legislative procedure that a Parliamentary bill or an amendment is not within the domain of law or is contrary to a delegation granted by virtue of Article 38, the Government may declare its inadmissibility.

In case of disagreement between the Government and the President of the Assembly concerned, the Constitutional Council, upon the request of one or the other, shall rule within a time limit of eight days.

Article 42. The discussion of bills shall pertain, in the first Assembly to which they have been referred, to the text presented by the Government.

An Assembly given a text passed by the other Assembly shall deliberate on the text that is transmitted to it.

Article 43. Government and Parliamentary bills shall, at the request of the Government or of the Assembly concerned, be sent for study to committees especially designated for this purpose.

Government and Parliamentary bills for which such a request has not been made shall be sent to one of the permanent committees, the number of which is limited to six in each Assembly.

Article 44. Members of Parliament and of the Government have the right of amendment.

After the opening of the debate, the Government may oppose the examination of any amendment which has not previously been submitted to committee.

If the Government so requests, the Assembly concerned shall decide, by a single vote, on all or part of the text under discussion, retaining only the amendments proposed or accepted by the Government.

Article 45. Every Government or Parliamentary bill shall be examined successively in the two Assemblies of Parliament with a view to the adoption of an identical text.

When, as a result of disagreement between the two Assemblies, it has been impossible to adopt a Government or Parliamentary bill after two readings by each Assembly, or, if the Government has declared the matter urgent, after a single reading by each of them, the Premier shall have the right to bring about a meeting of a joint committee composed of an equal number from both Assemblies charged with the task of proposing a text on the matters still under discussion.

The text elaborated by the joint committee may be submitted by the Government for approval of the two Assemblies. No amendment shall be admissible except by agreement with the Government.

If the joint committee does not succeed in adopting a common text, or if this text is not adopted under the conditions set forth in the preceding paragraph, the Government may, after a new reading by the National Assembly and by the Senate, ask the National Assembly to rule definitively. In this case, the National Assembly may reconsider either the text elaborated by the joint committee, or the last text voted by it, modified when circumstances so require by one or several of the amendments adopted by the Senate.

Article 46. The laws that the Constitution characterizes as organic shall be passed and amended under the following conditions:

A Government or Parliamentary bill shall be submitted to the deliberation and to the vote of the first Assembly notified only at the expiration of a period of fifteen days following its introduction;

The procedure of Article 45 shall be applicable. Nevertheless, lacking an agreement between the two Assemblies, the text may be adopted by the National Assembly on final reading only by an absolute majority of its members;

The organic laws relative to the Senate must be passed in the same manner by the two Assemblies;

The organic laws may be promulgated only after a declaration by the Constitutional Council on their constitutionality.

Article 47. The Parliament shall pass finance bills under the conditions to be stipulated by an organic law.

Should the National Assembly fail to reach a decision on first reading within a time limit of forty days after a bill has been filed, the Government shall refer it to the Senate, which must rule within a time limit of fifteen days. The procedure set forth in Article 45 shall then be followed.

Should Parliament fail to reach a decision within a time limit of seventy days, the provisions of the bill may be enforced by ordinance.

Should the finance bill establishing the resources and expenditures of a fiscal year not be filed in time for it to be promulgated before the beginning of that fiscal year, the Government shall urgently request Parliament for the authorization to collect the taxes and shall make available by decree the funds needed to meet the Government commitments already voted.

The time limits stipulated in the present article shall be suspended when the Parliament is not in session.

The Audit Office shall assist Parliament and the Government in supervising the implementation of the finance laws.

Article 48. The discussion of the bills filed or agreed upon by the Government shall have priority on the agenda of the Assemblies in the order determined by the Government.

One meeting a week shall be reserved, by priority, for questions asked by Members of Parliament and for answers by the Government.

Article 49. The Premier, after deliberation by the Council of Ministers, shall make the Government responsible, before the National Assembly, for its programme or, should the occasion arise, for a declaration of general policy.

When the National Assembly adopts a motion of censure, the responsibility of the Government shall thereby be questioned. Such a motion is admissible only if it is signed by at least one-tenth of the members of the National Assembly. The vote may not take place before forty-eight hours after the motion has been filed. Only the votes that are favourable to a motion of censure shall be counted; the motion of censure may be adopted only by a majority of the members comprising the Assembly. Should the motion of censure be rejected, its signatories may not introduce another motion of censure during the same session, except in the case provided for in the paragraph below.

The Premier may, after deliberation by the Council of Ministers, make the Government responsible before the National Assembly for the adoption of a vote of confidence. In this case, this vote of confidence shall be considered as adopted unless a motion of censure, filed during the twenty-four hours that follow, is carried under the conditions provided for in the preceding paragraph.

The Premier shall have the right to request the Senate for approval of a declaration of general policy.

Article 50. When the National Assembly adopts a motion of censure, or when it disapproves the programme or a declaration of general policy of the Government, the Premier must band the resignation of the Government to the President of the Republic.

Article 51. The closure of ordinary or extraordinary sessions shall by right be delayed, should the occasion arise, in order to permit the application of the provisions of Article 49.

Chapter VI.—On Treaties and International Agreements

Article 52. The President of the Republic shall negotiate and ratify treaties.

He shall be informed of all negotiations leading to the conclusion of an international agreement not subject to ratification.

Article 53. Peace treaties, commercial treaties, treaties or agreements relative to international organization, those that commit the finances of the State, those that modify provisions of a legislative nature, those relative to the status of persons, those that call for the cession, exchange or addition of territory may be ratified or approved only by a law.

They shall go into effect only after having been ratified or approved.

No cession, no exchange, no addition of territory shall be valid without the consent of the populations concerned.

Article 54. If the Constitutional Council, the matter having been referred to it by the President of the Republic, by the Premier, or by the President of one or the other Assembly, shall declare that an international commitment contains a clause contrary to the Constitution, the authorisation to ratify or approve this commitment may be given only after amendment of the Constitution.

Article 55. Treaties or agreements duly ratified or approved shall, upon their publication, have an authority superior to that of laws, subject, for each agreement or treaty, to its application by the other party.

Chapter VII.—The Constitutional Council

Article 56. The Constitutional Council shall consist of nine members, whose mandates shall last nine years and shall not be renewable. One-third of the membership of the Constitutional Council shall be renewed every three years. Three of its members shall be appointed by the President of the Republic, three by the President of the National Assembly, three by the President of the Senate.

In addition to the nine members provided for above, former Presidents of the Republic shall be members ex officio for life of the Constitutional Council.

The President shall be appointed by the President of the Republic. He shall have the deciding vote in case of a tie.

Article 57. The office of member of the Constitutional Council shall be incompatible with that of minister or Member of Parliament. Other incompatibilities shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 58. The Constitutional Council shall ensure the regularity of the election of the President of the Republic.

It shall examine complaints and shall announce the results of the vote.

Article 59. The Constitutional Council shall rule, in the case of disagreement, on the regularity of the election of deputies and senators.

Article 60. The Constitutional Council shall ensure the regularity of the referendum procedure and shall announce the results thereof.

Article 61. Organic laws, before their promulgation, and regulations of the parliamentary Assemblies, before they come into application, must be submitted to the Constitutional Council, which shall rule on their constitutionality.

To the same end, laws may be submitted to the Constitutional Council, before their promulgation, by the President of the Republic, the Premier, the President of the National Assembly, the President of the Senate, or any sixty deputies or sixty senators.

In the cases provided for by the two preceding paragraphs, the Constitutional Council must make its ruling within a time limit of one month. Nevertheless, at the request of the Government, in case of urgency, this period shall be reduced to eight days.

In these same cases, referral to the Constitutional Council shall suspend the time limit for promulgation.

Article 62. A provision declared unconstitutional may not be promulgated or implemented.

The decisions of the Constitutional Council may not be appealed to any jurisdiction whatsoever. They must be recognised by the public powers and by all administrative and juridical authorities.

Article 63. An organic law shall determine the rules of organization and functioning of the Constitutional Council, the procedure to be followed before it, and in particular of the periods of time allowed for laying disputes before it.

Chapter VIII.—On Judicial Authority

Article 64. The President of the Republic shall be the guarantor of the independence of the judicial authority.

He shall be assisted by the High Council of the Judiciary.

An organic law shall determine the status of magistrates. Magistrates may not be removed from office.

Article 65. The High Council of the Judiciary shall be presided over by the President of the Republic. The Minister of Justice shall be its Vice-President ex officio. He may preside in place of the President of the Republic.

The High Council shall, in addition, include nine members appointed by the President of the Republic in conformity with the conditions to be determined by an organic law.

The High Council of the Judiciary shall present nominations for judges of the Court of Cassation [Supreme Court of Appeal] and for First Presidents of courts of appeal. It shall give its opinion under the conditions to be determined by an organic law on proposals of the Minister of Justice relative to the nominations of the other judges. It shall be consulted on questions of pardon under conditions to be determined by an organic law.

The High Council of the Judiciary shall act as a disciplinary council for judges. In such cases, it shall be presided over by the First President of the Court of Cassation.

Article 66. No one may be arbitrarily detained.

The judicial authority, guardian of individual liberty, shall ensure the respect of this principle under the conditions stipulated by law.

Chapter IX.—The High Court of Justice

Article 67. A High Court of Justice shall be instituted.

It shall be composed, in equal number, of members elected, from among their membership, by the National Assembly and by the Senate after each general or partial election to these Assemblies. It shall elect its President from among its members.

An organic law shall determine the composition of the High Court, its rules, as well as the procedure to be applied before it.

Article 68. The President of the Republic shall not be held accountable for actions performed in the exercise of his office except in the case of high treason. He may be indicted only by the two Assemblies ruling by identical vote in open balloting and by an absolute majority of the members of said Assemblies. He shall be tried by the High Court of Justice.

The members of the Government shall be criminally liable for actions performed in the exercise of their office and rated as crimes or misdemeanours at the time they were committed. The procedure defined above shall be applied to them, as well as to their accomplices, in case of a conspiracy against the security of the State. In the cases provided for by the present paragraph, the High Court shall be bound by the definition of crimes and misdemeanours, as well as by the determination of penalties, as they are established by the criminal laws in force when the acts are committed.

Chapter X.—The Economic and Social Council

Article 69. The Economic and Social Council, at the referral of the Government, shall give its opinion on the Government bills, ordinances and decrees, as well as on the Parliamentary bills submitted to it.

A member of the Economic and Social Council may be designated by the latter to present, before the Parliamentary Assemblies, the opinion of the Council on the Government or Parliamentary bills that have been submitted to it.

Article 70. The Economic and Social Council may likewise be consulted by the Government on any problem of an economic or social character of interest to the Republic or to the Community. Any plan, or any bill dealing with a plan, of an economic or social character shall be submitted to it for its advice.

Article 71. The composition of the Economic and Social Council and its rules of procedure shall be determined by an organic law.

Chapter XI.—On Territorial Units

Article 72. The territorial units of the Republic shall be the communes, the Departments, and the Overseas Territories. Any other territorial unit shall be created by law.

These units shall be free to govern themselves through elected councils and under the conditions stipulated by law.

In the Departments and the Territories, the Delegate of the Government shall be responsible for the national interests, for administrative supervision, and for seeing that the laws are respected.

Article 73. Measures of adjustment required by the particular situation of the Overseas Departments may be taken with regard to the legislative system and administrative organization of those Departments.

Article 74. The Overseas Territories of the Republic shall have a particular organization, taking account of their own interests within the general interests of the Republic. This organization shall be defined and modified by law after consultation with the Territorial Assembly concerned.

Article 75. Citizens of the Republic who do not have ordinary civil status, the only status referred to in Article 34, may keep their personal status as long as they have not renounced it.

Article 76. The Overseas Territories may retain their status within the Republic.

If they express the desire to do so by decision of their Territorial Assemblies taken within the time limit set in the first paragraph of Article 91, they shall become either Overseas Departments of the Republic or, organized into groups among themselves or singly, member States of the Community.

Chapter XII.—On the Community

Article 77. In the Community instituted by the present Constitution, the States shall enjoy autonomy; they shall administer themselves and, democratically and freely, manage their own affairs.

There shall be only one citizenship in the Community.

All citizens shall be equal before the law, whatever their origin, their race and their religion. They shall have the same duties.

Article 78. The Community shall have jurisdiction over foreign policy, defence, the monetary system, common economic and financial policy, as well as the policy on strategic raw materials.

In addition, except by special agreement, control of justice, higher education, the general organization of external and common transport, and telecommunications shall be within its jurisdiction.

Special agreements may establish other common jurisdictions or regulate the transfer of jurisdiction from the Community to one of its members.

Article 79. The member States shall benefit from the provisions of Article 77 as soon as they have exercised the choice provided for in Article 76.

Until the measures required for implementation of the present title go into force, matters within the common jurisdiction shall be regulated by the Republic.

Article 80. The President of the Republic shall preside over and represent the Community.

The Community shall have, as organs, an Executive Council, a Senate and a Court of Arbitration.

Article 81. The member States of the Community shall participate in the election of the President according to the conditions stipulated in Article 6.

The President of the Republic, in his capacity as President of the Community, shall be represented in each State of the Community.

Article 82. The Executive Council of the Community shall be presided over by the President of the Community. It shall consist of the Premier of the Republic, the heads of Government of each of the member States of the Community, and of the ministers responsible for the common affairs of the Community.

The Executive Council shall organize the co-operation of members of the Community at Government and administrative levels.

The organization and procedure of the Executive Council shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 83. The Senate of the Community shall be composed of delegates whom the Parliament of the Republic and the legislative assemblies of the other members of the Community shall choose from among their own membership. The number of delegates of each State shall be determined, taking into account its population and the responsibilities it assumes in the Community.

The Senate of the Community shall hold two sessions a year, which shall be opened and closed by the President of the Community and may not last more than one month each.

The Senate of the Community, upon referral by the President of the Community, shall deliberate on the common economic and financial policy, before laws in these matters are voted upon by the Parliament of the Republic, and, should circumstances so require, by the legislative assemblies of the other members of the Community.

The Senate of the Community shall examine the acts and treaties or international agreements, which are specified in Articles 35 and 53, and which commit the Community.

The Senate of the Community shall take enforceable decisions in the domains in which it has received delegation of power from the legislative assemblies of the members of the Community. These decisions shall be promulgated in the same form as the law in the territory of each of the States concerned.

An organic law shall determine the composition of the Senate and its rules of procedure.

Article 84. A Court of Arbitration of the Community shall rule on litigations occurring among members of the Community.

Its composition and its competence shall be determined by an organic law.

Article 85. By derogation from the procedure provided for in Article 89, the provisions of the present title that concern the functioning of the common institutions shall be amendable by identical laws passed by the Parliament of the Republic and by the Senate of the Community.

The provisions of the present title may also be revised by agreements concluded between all states of the Community: the new provisions are enforced in the conditions laid down by the Constitution of each state.

Article 86. A change of status of a member State of the Community may be requested, either by the Republic, or by a resolution of the legislative assembly of the State concerned confirmed by a local referendum, the organization and supervision of which shall be ensured by the institutions of the Community. The procedures governing this change shall be determined by an agreement approved by the Parliament of the Republic and the legislative assembly concerned.

Under the same conditions, a Member State of the Community may become independent. It shall thereby cease to belong to the Community.

A Member State of the Community may also, by means of agreement, become independent without thereby ceasing to belong to the Community.

An independent State which is not a member of the Community may, by means of agreements, adhere to the Community without ceasing to be independent.

The position of these States within the Community is determined by the agreements concluded for that purpose, in particular the agreements mentioned in the preceding paragraphs as well as, where applicable, the agreements provided for in the second paragraph of article 85.

Article 87. The particular agreements made for the implementation of the present title shall be approved by the Parliament of the Republic and the legislative assembly concerned.

Chapter XIII.—On Agreements of Association

Article 88. The Republic or the Community may make agreements with States that wish to associate themselves with the Community in order to develop their own civilisations.

Chapter XIV.—On Amendment

Article 89. The initiative for amending the Constitution shall belong both to the President of the Republic on the proposal of the Premier and to the Members of Parliament.

The Government or Parliamentary bill for amendment must be passed by the two Assemblies in identical terms. The amendment shall become definitive after approval by a referendum.

Nevertheless, the proposed amendment shall not be submitted to a referendum when the President of the Republic decides to submit it to Parliament convened in Congress; in this case, the proposed amendment shall be approved only if it is accepted by a three-fifths majority of the votes cast. The Secretariat of the Congress shall be that of the National Assembly.

No amendment procedure may be undertaken or followed if it is prejudicial to the integrity of the territory.

The republican form of government shall not be the object of an amendment.

Chapter XV.—Temporary Provisions

Article 90. The ordinary session of Parliament is suspended. The mandate of the members of the present National Assembly shall expire on the day that the Assembly elected under the present Constitution convenes.

Until this meeting, the Government alone shall have the authority to convene Parliament.

The mandate of the members of the Assembly of the French Union shall expire at the same time as the mandate of the members of the present National Assembly.

Article 91. The institutions of the Republic, provided for by the present Constitution, shall be established within four months counting from the time of its promulgation.

This period shall be extended to six months for the institutions of the Community.

The powers of the President of the Republic now in office shall expire only when the results of the election provided for in Articles 6 and 7 of the present Constitution are proclaimed.

The member States of the Community shall participate in this first election under the conditions derived from their status at the date of the promulgation of the Constitution.

The established authorities shall continue in the exercise of their functions in these States according to the laws and regulations applicable when the Constitution goes into force, until the establishment of the authorities provided for by their new regimes.

Until its definitive constitution, the Senate shall consist of the present members of the Council of the Republic. The organic laws that shall determine the definitive constitution of the Senate must be passed before July 31st, 1959.

The powers conferred on the Constitutional Council by Articles 58 and 59 of the Constitution shall be exercised, until the establishment of this Council, by a committee composed of the Vice-President of the Council of State, as Chairman, the First President of the Court of Cassation, and the First President of the Audit Office.

The peoples of the member States of the Community shall continue to be represented in Parliament until the entry into force of the measures necessary to the implementation of Chapter XII.

Article 92. The legislative measures necessary to the establishment of the institutions and, until they are established, to the functioning of the public powers, shall be taken in meetings of the Council of Ministers, after consultation with the Council of State, in the form of ordinances having the force of law.

During the timelimit set in the first paragraph of Article 91, the Government shall be authorised to determine, by ordinances having the force of law and passed in the same way, the system of elections to the Assemblies provided for by the Constitution.

During the same period and under the same conditions, the Government may also adopt measures, in all domains, which it may deem necessary to the life of the nation, the protection of citizens or the safeguarding of liberties.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Judiciary is independent of the Government. Judges of the Court of Cassation and the First President of the Court of Appeal are appointed by the executive from nominations of the High Council of the Judiciary.

Subordinate cases are heard by Tribunaux d'instance, of which there are 469, and more serious cases by Tribunaux de grande instance, of which there are 184. Parallel to these Tribunals are the Tribunaux de commerce, for commercial cases, composed of judges elected by tradesmen and manufacturers among themselves. These do not exist in every district. Where there is no Tribunal de commerce, commercial disputes are judged by Tribunaux de grande instance.

The Conseils de Prud'hommes (Boards of Arbitration) consist of an equal number of workers or employees and employers ruling on the differences which arise over Contracts of Work.

The Tribunaux correctionnels (Correctional Courts) for criminal cases correspond to the Tribunal de grande instance for civil cases. They pronounce on all graver offences (délits), including those involving imprisonment.

Offences committed by juveniles of under 18 years go before specialized tribunals for children.

From all these Tribunals appeal lies to the Cours d'appel (Courts of Appeal).

The Cours d'assises (Courts of Assize) have no regular sittings, but are called when necessary to try every important case, for example, murder. They are presided over by judges who are members of the Cours d'appel and composed of elected judges (jury). Their decision is final, except where shown to be wrong in law, and then recourse is had to the Cour de Cassation (Court of Cassation).

The Cour de Cassation is not a supreme court of appeal but a higher authority for the proper application of the law. Its duty is to see that judgments are not contrary either to the letter or the spirit of the law; any judgment annulled by the Court involves the trying of the case anew by a court of the same category as that which made the original decision.

THE PRESS

The legislation under which the French press operates mostly dates back to an Act of 1881 which established very liberal conditions for journalism, asserting the right of individuals to produce newspapers without any prior authorization. At the same time the law defined certain offences which the press might commit, such as incitement to crime, disturbance of the peace by the publication of false information, libel and defamation, the publication of material offensive to the President and revealing official secrets. Further legislation in the 1940s somewhat extended these restrictions on the press, particularly with regard to children's literature.

An estimated 14,000 newspapers and periodicals are published in France. In 1978 there were thirteen daily papers published in Paris which had a national circulation and some 71 provincial dailies covering all the French regions. The circulations of the two groups in 1980 were 3.8 million for the Parisian press and 7.5 million for the provincial press. These figures showed a remarkable decline from the situation in 1946 when 28 Parisian dailies had a circulation of 5 million and 175 provincial dailies shared 9 million circulation. In recent years sharply rising costs and falling advertising revenue have increased the difficulties caused by declining circulation.

The provincial press, already strong under the Third Republic, achieved a leading role during the German occupation (1940-44), when Paris was cut off from the rest of France. Since the war, it has proved more adept than the national press at dealing with the fall in revenue and rising costs. The best-selling provincial dailies can now almost match the most popular Paris dailies for circulation and they have initiated various rationalization schemes. Six groups of provincial papers have been formed to pool advertising and, in some cases, copy and printing facilities. The largest of these groups are the one centred on Le Dauphiné Libéré (Grenoble) and Le Progrès (Lyon) and the group in East France led by L'Est Républicain.

The weekly news magazines have expanded in recent years; the two best examples of this are L'Express and Le Nouvel Observateur. Large-circulation illustrated magazines such as Paris-Match have suffered from the competition of television and traditional women's magazines have had difficulty adapting to the new attitudes of French women.

The only major daily which acts as the organ of a political party is the Communist paper, L'Humanité. All others are owned by individual publishers or by the powerful groups which have developed round either a company or a single personality. The major groups are as follows:

Hachette Group: 100 rue Réaumur, Paris 2e; taken over by Matra Group in Jan. 1981; publications include le Journal du Dimanche, France-Dimanche, Elle, Le Jardin des Modes, Le Point, Télé-7-Jours, Parents; f. 1826; Pres. Dir.-Gen. JEAN-LUC LAGARDÈRE.

Amaury Group (Dir.-Gen. ANDRÉ FOSSET): 25 ave. Michelet, 93400 Saint-Ouen; owns Le Parisien Libéré, the provincial dailies Le Courrier de l'Ouest and Le Maine Libre, the sports daily L'Équipe, several weeklies, including Points de Vue, and monthlies, including Marie-France.

Hersant Group: one of the largest of the provincial daily press groups; owns 12 dailies, 9 provincial weeklies and fortnightly and 11 magazines; dailies include L'Éclair, Nord-Matin and Nord-Éclair; has a majority holding in Le Figaro and France-Soir and an association with L'Aurore and Paris-Turf; also publishes various magazines.

Del Duca Group: 2 rue des Italiens, 75009 Paris; owns several popular magazines, including Nous Deux, Intimité, women's and children's journals, including Modes de Paris, and also Télé-Poche; Dir.-Gen. (Editions mondiales) JEAN MAMERT.

Bayard Presse: 3 rue Bayard, Paris 8e; important Catholic press group; owns the national La Croix, Le Pèlerin, Panorama d'Aujourd'hui, important magazines for young people and several specialized religious publications.

Filipacchi Group: 63 ave. Champs Élysées, Paris 8e; controls a number of large circulation magazines including Paris-Match, Salut les Copains, Mademoiselle, Age Tendre, Lui, Playboy and Photo.

Expansion Group: 67 ave. de Wagram, 75017 Paris; owns a number of magazines, including L'Expansion, Live Magazine, Architecture d'Aujourd'hui, F. Magazine; Pres. Dir. Gen. JEAN-LOUIS SERVAN-SCHREIBER.

Among the metropolitan dailies, the outstanding papers are Le Monde (c. 550,000), which carries no pictures, and Le Figaro (330,000). Also popular are France-Soir and Le Parisien Libéré. The English language International Herald Tribune (121,000) is also important. The major provincial dailies are Ouest-France published at Rennes (685,600), Le Progrès at Lyon (436,000), Le Dauphiné Libéré at Grenoble (385,000), La Voix du Nord at Lille (389,000) and Sud-Ouest at Bordeaux (430,000), which cater for rural readership by producing local subsidiary editions.

Metropolitan weekly papers range from the popular press, such as France-Dimanche (682,400) and Ici-Paris (700,000), through the more serious current affairs magazines like L'Express, Le Nouvel Observateur and the satirical Canard Enchaîné, to the literary and cultural Figaro Littéraire. Among the popular periodicals must be mentioned the weekly illustrated Paris-Match (1,100,000) and the women's journals Marie-Claire (678,000), Elle (412,000) and Marie-France (532,000).

RADIO AND TELEVISION

Broadcasting in France is a state monopoly. From 1964 to 1974 it was run by the Office de Radiodiffusion-Télévision Française (ORTF), under the tutelage of the Ministry of Information. The ORTF met with increasing difficulties and criticism from 1968 onwards. It was subject to the repeated strikes, accusations of political bias from both the right and the left and scandalous revelations of economic mismanagement. On January 1st, 1975 it was replaced by mismanagement. On January 1st, 1975 it was replaced by seven independent state-financed companies. They comprise four organizations with responsibility for programmes (one for each television channel and one for radio), an audio-visual institute, a company responsible for carrying out major production work for the radio and television institutions, and an establishment with general responsibility for broadcasting. Each company has its own budget and an administrative council composed of two representatives of the state, and one representative each of parliament, the press and the staff. The first and second television channels are partly financed by advertising.

TéléDiffusion de France: 21-27 rue Barbès, 92120 Montreuil; f. 1975; responsible for broadcasting programmes produced by the production companies (Radio France, TFR, Az, FR3), for the organization and maintenance of the networks, for study and research into radio and television equipment, and for representing French state broadcasting in international organizations; administrative council comprising 16 members, of which eight are representatives of the state; Pres. MAURICE RÉMY; Dir.-Gen. JEAN GUILLERMIN.

RADIO

HOME SERVICES

France-Inter: Entertains and informs. Broadcasts transmitted for 24 hours a day; they can be received by 98 per cent of the population and by listeners outside France. There are two main programmes, France-Inter and France-Inter Variétés. Other specialized and regional items are also produced. France-Inter is broadcast on long, medium and short waves and France-Inter Variétés is broadcast on medium wave and high fidelity (frequency modulated) transmitters.

France Culture: Serious programme on art, culture and thought; broadcasts can be received by 95 per cent of the population.

France Musique: Transmission on frequency modulation transmitters. Nearly 95 per cent of the programme is devoted to music; there are regular stereophonic transmissions.

Radio-Sorbonne: Low power transmission of educational programmes. Only available in the Paris region.

There are nine regional stations which relay Parisian programmes as well as regional broadcasts. Strasbourg radio includes daily broadcasts in German.

There are 21 local radio stations. There are broadcasts in France for foreign workers in Portuguese, Arabic, Serbo-Croat, Spanish, Turkish and Italian.

FOREIGN SERVICES

Broadcasts in German, Portuguese, Polish and Spanish to Europe. Broadcasts in English to N. Africa, W. Africa, Central and E. Africa. Broadcasts in French: Beam 1 Dakar; Beam 2 Abidjan; Beam 3 Brazzaville; Beam 4 Antananarivo; Beam 5 Cairo; also Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia.

PRIVATE RADIO

Despite the state monopoly of broadcasting within France, a number of radio stations based in countries on France's perimeter have very large French audiences. These include notably R.T.L. (Luxembourg), Europe No. 1 (Saarbrücken), Radio Monte Carlo (Monaco), Radio Andorre and Sud-Radio (Andorra). The French Government has major shareholdings in Europe No. 1 and R.T.L.

Number of receivers (1975): 17,032,000; more recent figure not available because radio licences ceased to be issued in 1975.

TELEVISION

There are three state-run channels. On the first channel transmission is on a 819-line system and covers 98.5 per cent of the population. The channel began a gradual conversion to colour broadcasting in 1976. The second channel is on a 625-line system in colour and 96.5 per cent of the population can receive it. There are 135 transmitting stations and about 3,000 relay stations for the first two channels. The third network, introduced in 1973, is on a 625-line system in colour and 70 per cent of the population can receive it.

Number of sets (1978): 15,014,184.

Télé-Luxembourg, Télé-Belge and Télé-Monte-Carlo have large regional audiences in France. German-speaking inhabitants of Alsace watch programmes from the Federal Republic.

OVERSEAS TELEVISION SERVICE

Programmes are produced in Martinique, Guadeloupe, French Guiana, Réunion, New Caledonia, Saint Pierre and Miquelon and French Polynesia.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAYS

Most of the French railways are controlled by the SNCF which took over the activities of the five largest railway companies in 1937. These companies still exist and have a 49 per cent share of the capital of the SNCF and three seats on the Board of Directors. The SNCF is divided into five Réseaux (Systems) which are further subdivided into 25 Régions (areas), all under the direction of a general headquarters in Paris. In December 1976 the SNCF operated 34,700 km. of track, 9,374 km. of which were electrified. The Parisian transport system is controlled by a separate authority, the RATP (Régie Autonome des Transports Parisiens and Syndicat des Transports Parisiens). A number of small railways in the provinces are run by independent organizations.

Société Nationale des Chemins de fer Français (SNCF): 88 rue St. Lazare, 75436 Paris Cedex 09; f. 1937; 51 per cent state-owned; Pres. of Board of Dirs. ANDRÉ CHADEAU; Vice-Pres. JEAN VELITCHKOVITCH, MICHEL DE BOISSIEU; Dir.-Gen. PAUL GENTIL.

The CEA is an establishment of scientific, industrial and technological character, presided over by the Prime Minister. Its function is to promote the uses of nuclear energy in science, industry and national defence; the fields in which it is active, either directly or through its own subsidiaries and participation in private companies, are: production of nuclear materials; reactor development; fundamental research; innovation and transfer of technologies; military applications; radiological protection and nuclear safety.

Administration is in the hands of a fifteen-member Comité de l'Energie Atomique (Atomic Energy Committee), consisting of government officials and representatives of science and industry.

THE GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The German Democratic Republic is bounded to the north by the Baltic Sea, to the west, south-west and south by the Federal Republic of Germany, to the south-east by Czechoslovakia and to the east by Poland along the line of the rivers Oder and Neisse. The climate is temperate. The mean annual temperature is 8.5°C (47.3°F), with an average of -0.7°C (30.7°F) for January and 18.1°C (64.6°F) for July. The official language is German, spoken by an overwhelming majority of the population. There is a small Sorbian-speaking minority. About 50 per cent of the population are Protestant (mainly belonging to the Evangelical Church) and 8 per cent Roman Catholic. The national flag (proportions 5 by 3) carries three equal horizontal bands of black, red and gold, bearing in the centre the coat of arms showing a hammer and compass on a wreath of grain. The capital is Berlin (the German Democratic Republic having jurisdiction only in the eastern section of the city).

Recent History

At the Potsdam Conference in July 1945 it was decided that the former German territories east of the Oder and Neisse rivers and the city of Danzig should become part of Poland, and that the northern half of East Prussia should become a part of the U.S.S.R. Germany was divided into British, French, Soviet and U.S. occupation zones, as was Berlin. The whole country was placed under Allied Administration but, after the failure of negotiations to form a unified German administration, the zones occupied by the Western allies merged to form the Federal Republic of Germany in September 1949. On October 7th the Soviet zone proclaimed itself the German Democratic Republic (G.D.R.), with Wilhelm Pieck as President and Otto Grotewohl as Prime Minister. These two men were joint chairmen of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany (SED), which had been formed in April 1946 by the merger of the Communist Party and the Social Democratic Party in the Soviet zone. The U.S.S.R. granted complete sovereignty to the G.D.R. on March 27th, 1954.

In the immediate post-war period the U.S.S.R. compensated for a small part of its losses with equipment, money and livestock from the Soviet zone. Over 200 industrial concerns became Soviet joint stock companies and were returned, after reconstruction, to the G.D.R. in 1953. In comparison with the reparations paid by the G.D.R., the Federal Republic escaped relatively lightly. Soviet policy also involved the creation of a Communist economic and political system. As early as 1945 the large agricultural estates were broken up and nationalized. In July 1946 all large-scale industrial concerns became state-owned. The policy of nationalization was continued by Ulbricht and the other SED party leaders as the U.S.S.R. gradually transferred control. In 1960 it was announced that 50 per cent of farms remaining outside state control were to be nationalized. This measure led to a sudden rush of refugees to West Berlin, which in turn was the main reason for the building of a wall between East and West Berlin in 1961.

The first elections, which were local ones, were held in September 1946, when the SED gained 57.1 per cent of the vote, the Christian Democrat and Liberal Democrat parties together 39.9 and others 3.0 per cent. The composition of the National Front, an umbrella organization formed in January 1950 for the various political parties and mass organizations, effectively gave the SED and its partners an overall majority. The SED has been the dominant political force since that time.

Walter Ulbricht took office as leader of the SED in 1950, and was Chairman of the Council of State (Head of State) from 1960 to 1973. He was replaced by Erich Honecker as Party leader in 1971. In 1976 Honecker was named Chairman of the Council of State, replacing Willi Stoph, who was reappointed Chairman of the Council of Ministers, the post he had held from 1964 to 1973.

In 1970, with the adoption by the Government of the Federal Republic of a new policy towards Eastern Europe (Ostpolitik), talks were held for the first time since the division of Germany between representatives of the two German states. Further such talks, following a Quadripartite Agreement on West Berlin in September 1971, clarified the details of access rights to West Berlin and also allowed West Berliners to visit the G.D.R. The two states signed a Basic Treaty in December 1972, agreeing to develop normal good-neighbourly relations with each other on the basis of equality of rights and to be guided by the United Nations Charter. In March 1974, a further agreement was signed in Bonn, implementing Article 8 of the Basic Treaty, to set up Permanent Representative Missions in Bonn and East Berlin. These agreements opened the way for many Western countries to establish diplomatic relations with the G.D.R. and for the G.D.R. to join the UN in September 1973.

In October 1980 relations with the Federal Republic deteriorated when the G.D.R. Government raised the minimum exchange requirement for foreign visitors and renewed its old demands for recognition by the Federal Republic of an independent East German citizenship and for the opening of full diplomatic relations at ambassadorial level. In the course of the Polish crisis which began in 1980, the G.D.R. leadership has been critical of both the Solidarity movement and the Polish Government. In October 1980 the Oder-Neisse border with Poland was virtually closed and in September 1981 the G.D.R. threatened to cut off economic aid to Poland.

In June 1981 elections to the Volksammer (People's Chamber) were held, in which the National Front candidates won 99.86 per cent of the vote. France, the United Kingdom and the U.S.A. protested to the Soviet Foreign Ministry for allowing the direct election of the 66 East Berlin Deputies, thus violating the Quadripartite Agreement of 1971.

The G.D.R. became a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) in 1950 and signed the Warsaw Pact in 1955. A Treaty of Friendship and Mutual Assistance between the G.D.R. and the U.S.S.R., concluded in 1964, was renewed for 25 years in 1975. Similar treaties exist between the G.D.R. and other East European countries.

Government

Under the 1968 constitution, the supreme organ of state power is the Volkskammer (People's Chamber), a unicameral body of 500 members, including 66 representatives of East Berlin. Since June 1979, when East Berlin was fully incorporated, all members of the Chamber are directly elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. The Chamber elects a 25-member Staatsrat (Council of State) to be its permanent organ. The Council of State functions collectively but its Chairman deals with all foreign relations as effective Head of State.

The executive branch of government is the Ministerrat (Council of Ministers), under a Chairman (Minister-President) appointed by the Chamber, which also approves his appointed Ministers. The Chairman directs the activities of the Council of Ministers and its Presidium.

Political power is held by the Socialist Unity (Communist) Party of Germany, the SED, which dominates the National Front of the German Democratic Republic (including four minor parties and four mass organizations). The SED's highest authority is the Party Congress, which elects the Central Committee to supervise Party work. The Central Committee elects a Political Committee (Politbüro), with 17 full members and eight candidate members, to direct its policy.

For local government, the country is divided into 14 districts (Bezirke) and the city of East Berlin.

Defence

A National People's Army, comprising land, sea and air forces, was created out of the People's Police in 1956. In July 1981 the estimated total strength of the armed forces was 167,000, comprising army 113,000, navy 16,000, air force 38,000. Military service lasts eighteen months. There are also 46,500 border troops, 17,500 security troops and about 450,000 members of the Workers' Militia. Defence expenditure for 1981 was estimated at 14,100 million DDR-Marks, an 8.4 per cent increase on the 1980 figure. The G.D.R. is a member of the Warsaw Pact.

Economic Affairs

The G.D.R. has been a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) since 1950, and the economy of the country is closely linked with that of the Soviet Union and other member countries. The G.D.R.'s economy is the healthiest in the Soviet bloc, despite the serious effects of the crisis in Poland, and ambitious economic targets have been set in the Five-Year Plan for 1981-85. In 1981 it was announced that the G.D.R. 1976-80 Plan had achieved an increase of 25.4 per cent in Net Material Product (NMP); industrial production was said to have risen by 32 per cent, construction by 27 per cent, while foreign trade had increased by 61 per cent.

By 1972 99 per cent of the G.D.R.'s industry was state-owned. In 1979 industry employed 41 per cent of the work force and contributed 61 per cent of the Net Material Product. Over 90 per cent of the people employed in state-owned industry are concentrated in large Kombinate, which have a degree of autonomy in production and trade.

In terms of production the G.D.R. is one of the world's leading industrial nations. Output grew by 5.3 per cent in 1979 and by 4.7 per cent in 1980. The 1981-85 Five-Year Plan envisages an increase of 28-30 per cent in industrial production. The machine, chemical and heavy engineering industries are leading exporters. Electronics and electrical engineering are also expanding rapidly.

All farmers are members of agricultural production co-operatives. The number employed in agriculture has remained steady and is around 10 per cent of the working population. The economic importance of agriculture is gradually declining. In 1977 and 1978 production increases did not meet the Plan targets, and the 1979 Economic Plan set a growth target of only 1.3 per cent for agriculture. In 1981 it was announced that grain imports were to be reduced by over 1 million metric tons (about one-third) by 1985: domestic grain production was to increase to 10 million tons, compared with 8.8 million in 1979.

The only major natural resource is lignite, which supplies over 60 per cent of the G.D.R.'s basic energy. Annual production is being expanded from 260 million metric tons in 1980 to a target of 285 million in 1985. The hard coal stocks have been exhausted and all coal mines had been closed by the end of 1977. The G.D.R. relies heavily on coal from Poland and industry was severely disrupted by the fall in coal exports from Poland in 1980. The U.S.S.R. supplies petroleum by pipeline which meets about 80 per cent of the country's oil requirements. There are two nuclear power plants in operation and the G.D.R. is pressing ahead with the development of nuclear energy, which generated about 10 per cent of the country's electricity in 1980: it was announced in 1981 that this proportion should increase to 12-14 per cent by 1985.

Foreign trade turnover, which grew at around 14 per cent a year from 1971 to 1976, rose by only 7 per cent in 1977 and 12 per cent in 1979. About 70 per cent of G.D.R. trade is with the U.S.S.R. and other CMEA countries. Between 1975 and 1979, the G.D.R. ran up a deficit of $2,500 million with the U.S.S.R. This figure is largely attributable to the increases in the price of petroleum and other raw materials imported from the U.S.S.R. In an attempt to counteract this, the G.D.R. has agreed to supply goods and technical expertise in return for Soviet gas and oil supplies. The Federal Republic remains the most important trading partner outside the Eastern bloc, accounting for about 10 per cent of total trade: in 1980 trade with the Federal Republic rose by a record 18.7 per cent over the previous year. In 1980 a five-year trade agreement was signed between the G.D.R. and France, designed to establish France as the G.D.R.'s second largest western trading partner. Under the 1981-85 Plan total foreign trade is expected to increase by 36 per cent.

There is officially no unemployment in the G.D.R. Since 1976 the birth rate has been rising steadily, with an increase of 4 per cent in 1978, although the total population is still declining.

Transport and Communications

There is a comprehensive transport system by rail, road, waterway and air. In 1979 there were 14,164 kilometres of railway, about 10 per cent of which were electrified. By 1985 a further 750 km. are expected to be electrified. In 1979 there were 47,500 kilometres of classified roads, of which 1,675 kilometres were motorway (Autobahn). There were also 2,302 kilometres of navigable inland waterways. Dresden, Riesa, Magdeburg and Berlin are the most important river ports. The principal seaport, Rostock, is being developed to carry more of East Europe's trade with the rest of the world. In 1979 the G.D.R.'s merchant fleet had 194 ships (excluding passenger vessels), with a displacement of about 1.3 million gross tons. The Interflug airline company operates four international airports and 59 routes are covered.

GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC

Introductory Survey, Statistical Survey

Social Welfare

State social insurance is compulsory for all employees. It also covers their dependants and special classes such as students. The scheme is administered by the Trade Union Federation (FDGB) and provides for medical and dental treatment, sick pay, maternity grants, retirement, disability and bereavement pensions. There are communal medical centres (Polyklinik), all doctors come under the state health service and medical treatment is free. There is a comprehensive scheme of family allowances and places in crèches are available for 60 per cent of children under three years of age. Total expenditure on health and social services was 36,600 million Marks in 1979. A five-day working week is now constitutionally enforced, and the paid annual holiday of between eighteen and twenty-four days can be spent at one of the 1,200 vacation centres. Youth services and sport receive large State subsidies.

Education

Education in the G.D.R. plans to cater for children from early childhood to the completion of a university course. Children attend nursery schools from the ages of 3 to 6. In 1975 the replacement of elementary and secondary schools by ten-year comprehensive schools was completed. The ten-year course is free and compulsory for all children.

After attendance at a comprehensive school a pupil may apply to stay for a further two years to take the Abitur (advanced level examination), which is necessary for admission to establishments of higher education. Those leaving school after ten years may serve either a two- or a three-year apprenticeship, thus qualifying for enrolment respectively at a technical school or at a university or college.

Courses at technical schools are generally of three years' duration and lead to professional qualifications. Courses at institutions of university status (these include colleges of technology, engineering and agriculture, teacher training colleges and art schools as well as seven actual universities) last for either four or five years, the first two years being dedicated to basic and general study, and the remainder to specialization. Day-release, correspondence and evening courses are designed to allow people to obtain a degree without interrupting their career.

Tourism

Tourism is promoted by the State Travel Bureau. The island of Rügen off the Baltic coast has considerable tourist traffic. The mountains of Thuringia and the Erzgebirge on the Czech frontier are much visited both in summer and winter. In 1978 817,618 tourists visited the G.D.R. through the State Travel Bureau.

Public Holidays

1982: April 9th (Good Friday), May 1st (May Day), May 31st (Whit Monday), October 7th (G.D.R. National Day), December 24th (half day), 25th, 26th (Christmas), December 31st (half day, New Year's Eve).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

100 Pfennige = 1 Mark der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik (DDR-Mark).

Exchange rates (October 1981):

£1 sterling = 4.11 DDR-Marks;

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of the German Democratic Republic was promulgated on April 9th, 1968, replacing the original Constitution which came into force when the Republic was founded in 1949. It was amended on October 7th, 1974. A summary is given below.

1 FOUNDATIONS OF THE SOCIALIST SOCIAL AND STATE ORDER

Political Foundations (Articles 1-8)

The German Democratic Republic is a socialist state of workers and farmers. It is the political organization of the working people in town and countryside who are jointly implementing socialism under the leadership of the working class and its Marxist-Leninist party. The capital is Berlin; the State flag is black, red, and gold, and bears the State coat of arms. All political power in the Republic is exercised by the working people and all power serves their welfare. The National Front of the German Democratic Republic unites all political parties and mass organizations working for the development of the socialist state. Citizens exercise their political power through democratically elected people's representatives. The Republic pursues a peaceful foreign policy and is linked irrevocably and permanently with the U.S.S.R. and other socialist states.

Economic Foundations, Science, Education and Culture (Articles 9-18)

The national economy is based on the socialist ownership of the means of production and is a socialist planned economy. All foreign economic relations are the monopoly of the state. All large industrial enterprises, mineral resources, banks and means of transport are nationally owned and private ownership of these facilities is not allowed. All installations, machinery and livestock in agricultural co-operatives and profits derived from co-operative use of the soil are co-operative property. The personal property of citizens and the right of inheritance are guaranteed. The Republic promotes culture, the arts and science and assures all citizens a high standard of education.

II CITIZENS AND ORGANIZATIONS IN SOCIALIST SOCIETY

Basic Rights and Basic Duties of Citizens (Articles 19-40)

The Republic respects the dignity and freedom of the individual and guarantees to all citizens the exercise of their rights. The conditions for acquiring and losing citizenship of the German Democratic Republic are stipulated by law. All citizens are equal before the law. Men and women have equal rights and the same legal status. Every citizen who has reached the age of 18 on election day has the right to vote and may be elected to the People's Chamber (Volkshammer) and to local people's representative bodies. Every citizen is obliged to serve in defence of his country. The Republic can grant political asylum to citizens of other states in certain circumstances.

Freedom of speech, the press, radio and television are guaranteed, as is the right to peaceful demonstration and assembly. Personal liberty is inviolable and everyone has the right to move freely within the state territory within the framework of the law. Postal and telecommunication privacy is assured and may be limited only for purposes of state security or criminal prosecution. Every citizen has the right to legal protection by the organs of the state when he is abroad.

The right to work is guaranteed and every citizen is free to select his own job. Everyone has the same right to education and attendance at secondary school is obligatory. All citizens are entitled to leisure time and annual paid holiday, to medical and other social welfare benefits. Social care is provided for the elderly and disabled. Housing is under public control and there is legal protection against eviction. Every citizen has the right of the inviolability of his home. Marriage, motherhood and the family have the special protection of the state and provision is made for large families, fatherless families, etc. Religious freedom is assured. Citizens of the German Democratic Republic of Sorb nationality have the right to cultivate their mother tongue and culture.

Enterprises, Towns and Local Communities in Socialist Society (Articles 41-43)

Enterprises, towns, villages and communal associations are entities with responsibilities of their own in which citizens work and shape their social relations. They safeguard the basic rights of citizens and are protected by the constitution. The local representative bodies are elected by the people and are responsible for local affairs. The working people also co-operate in the management of enterprises both directly and with the help of their elected organs.

The Trade Unions and Their Rights (Articles 44-45)

The free trade unions are united in the Confederation of Free German Trade Unions. They are independent bodies, are represented at all levels of the social system and play a decisive part in the solution of problems. They conclude agreements with government authorities and enterprise managements on all questions concerning the working and living conditions of the people. They take part in the shaping of the socialist legal system and administer the social insurance system of the workers.

Socialist Production Co-operatives and Their Rights (Article 46)

These are voluntary associations of farmers for the purpose of joint production and receive government assistance. They are represented in the state organs and take an active part in the state planning. Production co-operatives on the same lines also exist among fishermen, craftsmen and market gardeners.

III STRUCTURE AND SYSTEM OF STATE MANAGEMENT

Democratic Centralism (Article 47)

The structure and activities of the state organs are determined by the aims and tasks of state power, as stipulated in this Constitution. The sovereignty of the working people, which is implemented on the basis of democratic centralism, is the fundamental principle of the state structure.

The People's Chamber (Volkshammer) (Articles 48-65)

The People's Chamber is the supreme organ of state power and guarantees the enforcement of its laws. It is composed of 500 deputies elected by the people in a free, general, equal and secret ballot for a period of five years. It is convened not later than the 30th day after the election. It elects its Presidium to conduct the plenary sessions for the legislative period. The People's Chamber can be dissolved before the expiration of the legislative period only on its own decision.

Committees are formed from among the members of the People's Chamber to discuss bills and to co-operate in submitting them to the voters for popular discussion. They then submit their comments to the plenary session of the People's Chamber. Laws passed are proclaimed in the Law Gazette by the Chairman of the Council of State within one month and come into force on the fourteenth day after their proclamation.

The People's Chamber decides on the proclamation of war and the holding of referenda.

The Council of State (Staatsrat) (Articles 66-75)

The Council of State is the organ of the People's Chamber, operating between sessions of the latter, and fulfils all fundamental tasks resulting from its laws and decisions. It is elected by the People's Chamber at its first session and is responsible to it for its activities. It deals with bills to be submitted to the People's Chamber and deals with all basic tasks arising from its laws and decisions. It makes fundamental decisions on defence matters and exercises control over the constitutionality and legality of the activities of the Supreme Court and the Prosecutor General. The Council of State represents the G.D.R. internationally and ratifies and abrogates international treaties. It determines military and diplomatic ranks and other special titles and establishes state honours. It also exercises the right of amnesty and pardon.

The Council of Ministers (Ministerrat) (Articles 76-80)

The Council of Ministers, the Government of the G.D.R., is an organ of the People's Chamber. Acting on its behalf, it directs government policy, economic affairs and foreign policy in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. It prepares international treaties, draws up Bills, directs and co-ordinates the Ministries and other government bodies. It is answerable to the People's Chamber.

Local People's Representative Bodies and Their Organs (Articles 81-85)

The elected organs of state power in the districts, towns, regions, municipal boroughs and local communities are responsible for deciding on all local issues on the basis of law. The local people's representative bodies draw up and implement the economic plan and budget for their areas, and have their own income. Their decisions are binding and must be published. All such bodies elect their own councils and committees.

IV SOCIALIST LEGALITY AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

(Articles 86-104)

The Constitution has the force of law and legal regulations may not contradict it. Details of all laws and binding regulations are published. The citizens' participation in the administration of justice is guaranteed and it is the declared aim of socialist society to combat all violations of the law. Laws on the punishment of war crimes and of crimes against peace and humanity correspond to the generally recognized norms of international law.

The administration of justice in the Republic is exercised by the Supreme Court, the District Courts, the Regional Courts and the social (lay) courts. In military matters jurisdiction is exercised by the Supreme Court, military tribunals and military courts. The Supreme Court is the highest organ of the administration of justice and is responsible to the People's Chamber. All judges are democratically elected by the people's representative bodies or by the citizens themselves and must be men of knowledge and experience who are loyally devoted to the socialist state. The public prosecutors' office safeguards socialist legality and ensures that persons who have committed crimes are called to account before the court. The public prosecutors' office is directed by the Prosecutor General and the public prosecutors of the districts and regions are appointed by him and subordinate to him.

An act is punishable only if it contravened penal law at the time of its commission, if the offender has acted in a culpable way and if his guilt is proved beyond doubt. Persons under arrest must be brought before a judge within twenty-four hours of their arrest and only judges are authorized to judge the admissibility of detention on remand. Nobody may be denied the right to appear before his lawful judge and special courts are inadmissible. Every citizen has the right to be heard in court and the right to be defended by a counsel is guaranteed throughout the whole criminal procedure. Any citizen or organization has the right to submit suggestions or grievances to the authorities and may suffer no disadvantages as a result. Damages inflicted on a citizen or his personal property as a result of unlawful measures by government officials are to be compensated by the authority concerned.

CONCLUDING PROVISIONS

(Articles 105-106)

The Constitution may be amended only through a law of the People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic which expressly amends or supplements the text of the Constitution.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The principles on which the legal system is to function are embodied in the Constitution. Jurisdiction is exercised by the Supreme Court, the County Courts (Bezirksgerichte), the District Courts (Kreisgerichte) and the Social Courts. There are also Military Courts. The Supreme Court is the highest organ of justice and supervises the work of the other courts. It is responsible to the People's Chamber.

Cases in the first instance are dealt with in the County and District Courts with one presiding judge and two lay judges. In a District Court one judge may preside and pass sentence. Cases in the second instance are dealt with by three judges in the County Courts and in the Supreme Court. However, cases are handled to an increasing extent by the Social Courts and, in the case of minor civil offences and labour disputes, by the disputes commissions.

All judges and members of the Social Courts are independent in their administration of justice. They can be recalled by their electors only if they violate the Constitution or the law or commit a serious breach of their duties.

According to the Constitution, all judges and members of the Social Courts are elected either by popular representative bodies (People's Chamber, County Parliaments, Town Assembly, etc.) or by direct popular vote. Candidates are submitted by the Minister of Justice after consultations with the relevant committees of the National Front. The Candidates for the Labour Courts are submitted to the Minister of Justice by the Confederation of Free German Trade Unions (FDGB). The members of the disputes commissions are elected by the workers in their organizations. The State Prosecutors are appointed by the Prosecutor-General.

Attached to the People's Chamber is the Constitutional and Legislature Commission in which all parties are represented according to their size. All members of the Commission are appointed by the People's Chamber. Three members of the Supreme Court and three State Law Teachers, who may not be members of the People's Chamber, also serve on the Commission.

A new Criminal Code was introduced in January 1968, replacing the German Criminal Code of 1871. Amendments to this were made in December 1974 and January 1976. Similarly, a new Civil Code of January 1976 replaced the German Civil Code of 1896. A new Labour Code came into force on January 1st, 1978.

THE PRESS

In 1947 the Presseamt (Press Administration Office) was founded, closely associated with the office of the Prime Minister. Its functions were: to issue licences to approved organizations belonging to the eastern bloc; to distribute newsprint; and to give a measure of editorial direction to non-political papers. By means of this Office the Government acquired a considerable degree of control over the press, reinforced by the Press Section of the SED (Socialist Unity Party) Central Committee whose function is to issue daily instructions to editors of political papers as to which news items require emphasis and comment.

The 1968 Constitution of the German Democratic Republic guarantees the freedom of the press, radio and television, and states that every citizen of the G.D.R. has the right, "in accordance with the spirit and aims of the Constitution, to express his opinion freely and publicly. This right is not limited by any service or employment relationship. No person may be placed at a disadvantage for exercising this right". There is thus no formal censorship but editors are personally responsible for the content of their papers which are expected to reflect the social and political system of the G.D.R.

All newspapers and periodicals are owned and managed by political or independent organizations such as party committees, trade unions, cultural associations, youth organizations, etc. Almost all dailies are controlled by or affiliated to a political party, such as Neues Deutschland (Socialist Unity Party), Der Morgen (Liberal Democratic Party), National-Zeitung (National Democratic Party) and Neue Zeit (Christian Democratic Union). Tribüne is the organ of the Trade Unions League and Bauern-Echo of the Democratic Farmers' Party. The Free German Youth publishes the daily Junge Welt and the weekly Forum. The official news agency, the Allgemeiner Deutscher Nachrichtendienst, became a state monopoly in 1946.

In 1978 39 dailies appeared in the G.D.R., with a total circulation of 8.5 million. There are 32 weeklies, with a circulation of 9 million, and 519 periodicals and illustrated magazines, with a combined average circulation of 18.5 million. According to the Press Association of the G.D.R., each family buys on average at least one daily newspaper, one weekly and three periodicals. In 1974 the G.D.R. ranked third in the world in terms of daily newspaper circulation (452 per 1,000 of population).

The most important and influential dailies are those published by the Socialist Unity Party, headed by Neues Deutschland in Berlin, and by the Berlin organs of the other parties mentioned above. Though circulation figures are often not disclosed, a very popular paper is Berliner Zeitung am Abend. Leading dailies outside Berlin are Freie Presse (Karl-Marx-Stadt), Freiheit (Halle), Sächsische Zeitung (Dresden), Leipziger Volkszeitung (Leipzig), Ostsee Zeitung (Rostock) and Freies Wort (Suhl).

The most widely-read periodicals are the weeklies FF-dabei, an illustrated radio and television magazine, Wochenpost, and the women's magazine Für Dich. Other high-circulation weeklies are Horizont, dealing with international political and economic affairs, the illustrated popular magazines Neue Berliner Illustrierte and Freie Welt, and the satirical weekly Eulenspiegel.

THE FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY AND WEST BERLIN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Federal Republic of Germany lies in the heart of Europe. Its neighbours to the west are the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg and France, to the south Switzerland and Austria, to the east Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic, and to the north Denmark. The climate is temperate, with an average annual temperature of 9°C (48°F), although there are considerable variations between the North German lowlands and the Bavarian Alps. The language is German. The numbers of Protestants and Roman Catholics are about equal and together total over 96 per cent of the population. The national flag (proportions 5 by 3) consists of three horizontal stripes of black, red and gold. The seat of government is Bonn.

Recent History

After the defeat of the Third Reich in 1945, Germany was divided according to the Berlin Agreement into American, Soviet, British and French occupation zones. Berlin was similarly divided. After the failure of negotiations to establish a unified German administration, the three Western-occupied zones were integrated economically in 1948. A provisional constitution, the Grundgesetz (Basic Law), came into force in the three zones (excluding Saarland) in May 1949. The first federal elections were held in August 1949, when the Christian Democratic Union/Christian Social Union (CDU/CSU) and the Social Democratic Party (SPD) emerged as the two largest political parties. The Federal Republic of Germany (F.R.G.) was established on September 21st, 1949, although its sovereignty was limited by the continuing Allied military occupation. The first President of the Republic was Theodor Heuss. In October 1949 the Soviet-occupied zone of Germany declared itself the German Democratic Republic (G.D.R.), with the Soviet-occupied zone of Berlin as its capital. This left the remainder of Berlin, known as West Berlin, as an "island" of the F.R.G. in G.D.R. territory. Following the establishment of the Federal Republic, the military occupation was converted into a contractual defence relationship. The Paris Agreement of 1954 gave full sovereign status to the Federal Republic from May 5th, 1955, and also gave it membership of NATO. In 1957 the Bundestag (Federal Assembly) declared Berlin the capital of Germany and the Federal Republic continues to aim for a united Germany. Until such time the seat of the Federal Government is Bonn. Saarland, under French occupation, was rejoined with the F.R.G. administratively in January 1957 and became economically incorporated in July 1959.

Under the Chancellorship of Dr. Konrad Adenauer (1949-63) and the direction of Economics Minister Dr. Ludwig Erhard, who succeeded Adenauer as Chancellor until 1966, the Federal Republic rebuilt itself rapidly to become one of the most affluent and economically dynamic states of Europe, allying itself with the West, to avoid the threat of "expansionist" communism, and becoming a founder member of the European Communities. Owing to the Government's insistence on reunification, maintaining that the 1937 borders of the Reich remained legally valid until the signing of a peace treaty by the Government of a united Germany, West Germany became completely cut off from eastern Europe.

The CDU/CSU, which had formed the Government from 1949, ruled in coalition with the SPD from 1966 to 1969 under the Chancellorship of Dr. Kurt Kiesinger. After the general elections of October 1969, a new coalition of the SPD and the Free Democratic Party (FDP) formed the Government, under the Chancellorship of Willy Brandt, adopting a fresh policy towards eastern Europe (Ostpolitik) and particularly towards the G.D.R. During 1970 formal talks were conducted between the two countries for the first time and there was a marked increase in diplomatic contacts between the Federal Republic and the other Communist countries of Europe. Treaties were signed with the Soviet Union on the Renunciation of Force, and with Poland, recognizing the Oder/Neisse Line as the border between Germany (actually the G.D.R.) and Poland. The Federal Republic also renounced German claims on the eastern territories of the old Reich. In 1971 the Quadripartite Agreement of the four powers on the position of West Berlin provided that there should be unimpeded access from the Federal Republic to West Berlin and that citizens of West Berlin should be allowed to visit the G.D.R. The two German states concluded a Basic Relations Treaty governing their relationship in 1972 and became members of the United Nations in September 1973. Between 1974 and 1979 Permanent Representative Missions were set up in Bonn and East Berlin, and access for West Germans to the G.D.R. was made easier. In October 1980, however, relations between the two countries deteriorated when the G.D.R. Government raised the minimum exchange requirements for foreign visitors and renewed its demands for full diplomatic recognition by the F.R.G. Following elections in November 1972 the SPD became for the first time the largest party in the Bundestag. Chancellor Brandt resigned in May 1974, after the discovery that his personal assistant had been working for the G.D.R., and was succeeded by Helmut Schmidt, previously Minister of Finance. In the same month Walter Scheel, Brandt's Vice-Chancellor and Foreign Minister, was elected President in place of Gustav Heinemann.

A deteriorating economic situation was accompanied by a decline in the popularity of the Government and increasing tension between the coalition partners. In the general election of October 1976 the SPD lost its position as largest party in the Bundestag, but the SPD/FDP coalition retained a slender majority. Traditional partnerships between parties became less certain. The Bavarian CSU split from and then rejoined the CDU in 1976. Again in 1979 there was tension between the two parties over the choice of the CSU leader, Franz Josef Strauss (Minister-President of Bavaria), as CDU/CSU candidate for Chancellor in the 1980 general election. In July 1979 Karl Carstens of the CDU, President of the Bundestag, succeeded Walter Scheel as President of the Federal Republic.

In the general election of October 1980, which developed into a battle of personalities between Schmidt and Strauss, the SPD/FDP coalition achieved a majority of 45 seats in the Bundestag: the greatest gains were made by the FDP, with the support of liberal Christian Democrats who did not wish to vote for Herr Strauss, whereas the SPD made almost negligible gains.

In elections for the city government of West Berlin (traditionally a stronghold of the SPD), held in May 1981, the SPD/FDP coalition was defeated by the CDU, a serious setback for the Federal Government. The SPD/FDP alliance, reflected throughout its 12 years of existence in the governments of various Länder, now survived (precariously) only in Hesse. At Land and Federal level, splits within and between the two parties have been provoked by nuclear energy policy, NATO's missile strategy and the 1982 budget, which included cuts in defence and public spending. In February 1981 the ruling SPD in Hamburg voted to withdraw from the controversial government-planned nuclear energy project at Brokdorf, and in May the city's SPD Bürgermeister resigned over the issue. In May the Chancellor was defied by the left wing of the SPD in a vote in the Bundestag on NATO's policy of deploying nuclear missiles in Europe, to which the Government is committed. The Chancellor and the Foreign Minister were instrumental, however, in bringing about the announcement in September of missile reduction talks soon to be held between the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.

Government

The Federal Republic is composed of 10 Länder (states)—each Land having its own constitution, parliament and government—plus West Berlin which retains a separate status.

The country has a parliamentary regime, with a bi-cameral legislature. The Upper House is the Bundesrat (Federal Council), with 45 seats, including 41 members of Land governments (which appoint and recall them) and four representatives, with limited voting rights, appointed by the West Berlin Senate. The term of office of Bundesrat members varies with Land election dates. The Lower House, and the country's main legislative organ, is the Bundestag (Federal Assembly), with 519 deputies, including 497 elected for four years by universal adult suffrage (using a mixed system of proportional representation and direct voting) and 22 members, with limited voting rights, elected by the West Berlin House of Representatives.

Executive authority rests with the Federal Government, led by the Federal Chancellor, who is elected by an absolute majority of the Bundestag and appoints the other Ministers. The Federal President is elected by a Federal Convention (Bundesversammlung) which meets only for this purpose and consists of the Bundestag and an equal number of members elected by Land parliaments. The President is a constitutional Head of State with little influence on government.

Each Land has its own legislative assembly, with the right to pass laws except on matters which are the exclusive right of the Federal Government, such as defence, foreign affairs and finance. Education, police, culture and environmental protection are in the control of the Länder. Local responsibility for the execution of Federal and Land laws is undertaken by the city boroughs and counties.

Defence

The Federal Republic is a member of NATO. Conscription has been in force since 1956 and lasts for 15 months. In July 1981 the armed forces totalled 495,000, including 225,000 conscripts. The strength of the army stood at 335,200, including 176,000 conscripts. The navy was 36,500 strong (including 11,000 conscripts), and there were 106,000 in the air force (38,000 conscripts). Defence expenditure for 1981 was estimated at DM42,090 million.

Economic Affairs

After the destruction caused by the Second World War the Federal Republic, containing most of the principal industrial areas of Germany, made a remarkable economic recovery which was sustained over a number of years and has often been described as Germany's Wirtschaftswunder ("economic miracle"). The basis of this prosperity has been the industrial sector, which provides about 50 per cent of G.D.P. The chief industries are mechanical engineering, electrical engineering and electronics, vehicles, chemicals and food processing. High energy and labour costs and foreign competition (particularly from Japan) led to a fall in production in several sectors in 1980, and a drop of over 2 per cent in total industrial production was expected in 1981. Agriculture, although still important, contributed only 2.2 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980 and employed 5.3 per cent of the working population. The contribution of commerce and transportation to the G.D.P. has also declined, but that of the service sector rose from 11 per cent in 1960 to 22 per cent in 1980.

The Federal Republic has relatively few natural resources; hard coal, lignite and salt are the only mineral deposits of any size. Hard coal mining in the Ruhr area has been declining but, in the face of rising petroleum costs and public opposition to the Government's nuclear energy programme (which provided 3.6 per cent of energy requirements in 1980), new emphasis has been put on coal production, which increased slightly in 1980: hard coal provided 19.7 per cent of energy requirements and lignite 9.9 per cent. Negotiations on supplies of natural gas from the U.S.S.R., to meet some 30 per cent of gas requirements, were held in 1981.

The Federal Republic is the world's second largest exporter, after the U.S.A. The trade surplus, however, dropped from DM 41,200 million in 1978 to DM 22,430 million in 1979 and to DM 9,140 million in 1980, largely due to the increased cost of energy imports, which accounted for 23 per cent of total imports in 1980: the cost of imported petroleum rose by a third even though consumption was reduced by 10 per cent. The weakness of the Deutsche Mark against the dollar since early 1980 also contributed to the rise in import prices, although at the same time it made German exports more competitive. Since 1970 about 50 per cent of trade has been with other EEC countries, the Federal Republic's two largest trading partners being the Netherlands and France.

In 1979 G.N.P. grew by 4.5 per cent in real terms, compared with 3.4 per cent in 1978 and 2.6 per cent in 1977. The 1979 growth rate was not only the highest among major industrial countries but also the target of 4 per cent which was forecast. In 1980, however, G.N.P. rose by only 1.8 per cent, and in the first half of 1981 it fell by 1.3 per cent, compared with the same period in 1980, but there were signs of recovery in the second half of 1981 and an increase of 2 per cent was predicted for 1982. The revaluation of the Deutsche Mark within the European Monetary System in October 1981 was expected to lessen the cost of imports and reduce inflation (averaging 5.5 per cent in 1980). The draft budget for 1982 envisaged expenditure of DM 240,770 million, an increase of 4.2 per cent over 1981; it was hoped that expenditure cuts, mainly in defence and social spending, would permit a reduction in public borrowing and an improvement in the balance of payments, which showed a deficit of DM 30,000 million in 1980.

Unemployment on an annual basis fell below one million in 1979 and remained at 3.8 per cent of the working population, but increased to 1.3 million (5.5 per cent) in August 1981 and was expected to remain above this level for the next year. The Federal Republic was a pioneer of worker participation (known as Mitbestimmung), but the rising cost of labour is a considerable problem. Wage increases in 1981 were expected to remain below 5 per cent, and industrial relations remained comparatively trouble-free.

Transport and Communications

The Federal Republic has a highly developed system of transport by rail, inland waterways, roads and air. At the end of 1979 there were 482,000 kilometres of roads, including a dense system of motorways linking major towns. Highspeed Intercity and Trans-Europ Express trains cover four main routes which link 50 major cities in the Federal Republic. There are about 4,400 kilometres of navigable inland waterways and the Rhine-Main-Danube Canal, which will link the North Sea and the Black Sea, is expected to be completed during the 1980s. The principal ports for freight are Bremen, Hamburg and Wilhelmshaven. There are eight major international airports.

Social Welfare

Social legislation provides insurance for health, accident, old-age, disability and unemployment. The schemes for disability, old-age and unemployment insurance are compulsory for all employees, and over 80 per cent of the population is covered. Insurance is administered by autonomous regional and local organizations. Pensions are the highest in Europe; the amount is based on contributions paid, is related to national average earnings and regularly adjusted. Sickness insurance pays for all medical attention and provides a benefit of 85 to 90 per cent of the normal wage. There is no national health service. About 35 per cent of the expenditure of the Federal Budget goes to social security payments.

Education

The Basic Law gives the control of education entirely to the Land governments. They do, however, co-operate quite closely to ensure a large degree of conformity in the system.

Education is compulsory from the end of the sixth to the eighteenth year, and nine years must be full-time. Primary education is free, and grants are made for secondary education wherever fees are payable. Attendance at the primary school (Grundschule) is obligatory for all children during the first four years of their school life, after which they go on to one of the three types of secondary school. Approximately half this age group attend the Hauptschule (secondary modern) for five years, after which they go into employment, but continue their education part-time for three years at a vocational school. Alternatively pupils may attend the Realschule (intermediate school) for six years, or the Gymnasium (grammar school) for nine years. There are three types of Gymnasium, specializing in Classics, Modern Languages, and Mathematics and Science. The Abitur (grammar school leaving certificate) is a necessary prerequisite for university education. In addition to the three main types of secondary school, all Länder have, mostly on an experimental basis, Gesamtschulen (comprehensive schools).

In the 1970s the Federal Republic's 48 universities and nine technical universities suffered a severe crisis of space. A university building programme, started in 1971, failed to keep up with demand and the number of students at universities and colleges rose from 585,000 in 1971 to more than 900,000 in 1978. Legislation now limits the length of study and numbers of students, especially in such subjects as medicine. A higher education programme launched in 1978 aims to provide DM 20,000 million in extra expenditure and places for one million students by the mid-1980s.

Tourism

Germany's tourist attractions include spas, summer and winter resorts, mountains, medieval towns and villages. The North Sea coast, Rhine Valley, Black Forest and Bavaria are the most popular areas. In 1979 there were more than 1.9 million beds available for tourists. Overnight stays by foreign tourists totalled over 20 million in 1979. The number of foreign tourists visiting the Federal Republic was 8.9 million and receipts from tourism totalled DM 10,524 million.

Public Holidays

1982: April 9th (Good Friday), April 12th (Easter Monday), May 1st (Labour Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), May 31st (Whit Monday), June 10th (Corpus Christi), June 17th (Day of German Unity), August 15th (Assumption), November 1st (All Saints' Day)*, November 17th (Repentance Day), December 25th and 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 6th (Epiphany)*.

* Religious holidays observed in certain Länder only.

Notes: 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 500 and 1,000 DM.

Exchange rates (October 1981): £1 sterling = 4.15 DM; U.S. $1 = 2.22 DM.

100 DM = £24.11 = $45.07.

Note: From March 1961 to October 1969 the par value of the Deutsche Mark was 25 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 4.00 DM). Between October 1969 and May 1971 the rate was $1 = 3.66 DM. From December 1971 to February 1973 it was $1 = 3.2225 DM; and from February to March 1973 it was $1 = 2.9003 DM. Since March 1973 the Deutsche Mark has "floated" on foreign exchange markets. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 8.784 DM between October 1969 and May 1971; and £1 = 8.397 DM from December 1971 to June 1972, since when sterling has been "floating". The average exchange rate (DM per U.S. dollar) was: 2.6726 in 1973; 2.5878 in 1974; 2.4603 in 1975; 2.5180 in 1976; 2.3222 in 1977; 2.0086 in 1978; 1.8329 in 1979; 1.8177 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

THE Basic Law (Grundgesetz) of 1949 was and is intended as a provisional Constitution to serve until a permanent one for Germany as a whole can be drawn up. The Parliamentary Council which framed it set out to continue the tradition of the Constitution of 1848-49, and to preserve some continuity with subsequent German constitutions (with Bismarck's Constitution of 1871, and with the Weimar Constitution of 1919) while avoiding the mistakes of the past. It contains 146 articles, divided into 11 sections, and introduced by a short preamble.

I. Basic Rights

The opening articles of the Constitution guarantee the dignity of man, the free development of his personality, the equality of all men before the law, and freedom of faith and conscience. Men and women shall have equal rights, and no one may be prejudiced because of sex, descent, race, language, homeland and origin, faith or religion or political opinion.

No one may be compelled against his conscience to perform war service as a combatant (Art. 4). All Germans have the right to assemble peacefully and unarmed and to form associations and societies. Everyone has the right freely to express and to disseminate his opinion through speech, writing or pictures. Freedom of the press and freedom of reporting by radio and motion pictures are guaranteed (Art. 5). Censorship is not permitted.

The State shall protect marriage and the family property and the right of inheritance. The care and upbringing of children is the natural right of parents. Illegitimate children shall be given the same conditions for their development and their position in society as legitimate children. Schools are under the supervision of the State. Religion forms part of the curriculum in the State schools, but parents have the right to decide whether the child shall receive religious instruction (Art. 7).

A man's dwelling is inviolable; house searches may be made only by Court Order. No German may be deprived of his citizenship if he would thereby become stateless. The politically persecuted enjoy the right of asylum (Art. 16).

II. The Federation and the Länder

Article 20 describes the Federal Republic (Bundesrepublik Deutschland) as a democratic and social federal state. The colours of the Federal Republic are to be black-red-gold, the same as those of the Weimar Republic. Each Land within the Federal Republic has its own Constitution, which must, however, conform to the principles laid down in the Basic Law. All Länder, districts and parishes must have a representative assembly resulting from universal, direct, free, equal and secret elections (Art. 28). The exercise of the power of state is the concern of the Länder, in so far as the Basic Law does not otherwise prescribe. Where there is incompatibility, Federal Law supersedes Land Law (Art. 31). Every German has in each Land the same civil rights and duties.

Political parties may be freely formed in all the states of the Federal Republic, but their internal organization must conform to democratic principles, and they must publicly account for the sources of their funds. Parties which seek to impair or abolish the free and democratic basic order or to jeopardize the existence of the Federal Republic of Germany are unconstitutional (Art. 21). So are activities tending to disturb the peaceful relations between nations, and, especially, preparations for aggressive war, but the Federation may join a system of mutual collective security in order to preserve peace. The rules of International Law shall form part of Federal Law and take precedence over it and create rights and duties directly for the inhabitants of the Federal territory (Art. 25).

The territorial composition of the Länder shall be re-organized with due regard to regional unity, territorial and cultural connections, economic expediency and social structure.

III. The Bundestag

The Federal Assembly or Bundestag is the Lower House. Its members are elected by the people in universal, free, equal, direct and secret elections, for a term of four years.* Any person who has reached the age of 18 is eligible to vote and any person who has reached the age of 18 is eligible for election (Art. 38). A deputy may be arrested for a punishable offence only with the permission of the Bundestag, unless he be apprehended in the act or during the following day.

* The elections of 1949 were carried out on the basis of direct election. But in January 1953, the draft of a new electoral law was completed by the Federal Government and passed shortly before the dissolution. The new law represents a compromise between direct election and proportional representation, and is designed to discourage the rise of many small parties.

The Bundestag elects its President and draws up its Standing Orders. Most decisions of the House require a majority vote. Its meetings are public, but the public may be excluded by the decision of a two-thirds majority. Upon the motion of one-quarter of its members the Bundestag is obliged to set up an investigation committee.

IV. The Bundesrat

The Federal Council or Bundesrat is the Upper House through which the Länder participate in the legislation and the administration of the Federation. The Bundesrat consists of members of the Land governments, which appoint and recall them (Art. 51). Each Land has at least three votes; Länder with more than two million inhabitants have four, and those with more than six million inhabitants have five. The votes of each Land may only be given as a block vote. The Bundesrat elects its President for one year. Its decisions are taken by simple majority vote. Meetings are in public, but the public may be excluded. The members of the Federal Government have the right, and, on demand, the obligation, to participate in the debates of the Bundesrat.

V. The Federal President

The Federal President or Bundespräsident is elected by the Federal Convention (Bundesversammlung), consisting of the members of the Bundestag and an equal number of members elected by the Länder Parliaments (Art. 54). Every German eligible to vote in elections for the Bundestag and over 40 years of age is eligible for election. The candidate who obtains an absolute majority of votes is elected, but if such majority is not achieved by any candidate in two ballots, whoever receives most votes in a further ballot becomes President. The President's term of office is five years. Immediate re-election is admissible only once. The Federal President must not be a member of the Government or of any legislative body or hold any salaried office. Orders and instructions of the President require the counter-signature of the Federal Chancellor or competent Minister, except for the appointment or dismissal of the Chancellor or the dissolution of the Bundestag.

The President represents the Federation in International Law and accredits and receives envoys. The Bundestag or the Bundesrat may impeach the President before the Federal Constitutional Court on account of wilful violation of the Basic Law or of any other Federal Law (Art. 61).

VI. The Federal Government

The Federal Government (Bundesregierung) consists of the Federal Chancellor (Bundeschkanzler) and the Federal Ministers (Bundesminister). The Chancellor is elected by an absolute majority of the Bundestag on the proposal of the Federal President (Art. 63). Ministers are appointed and dismissed by the President upon the proposal of the Chancellor. Neither he nor his Ministers may hold any other salaried office. The Chancellor determines general policy and assumes responsibility for it, but within these limits each Minister directs his department individually and on his own responsibility. The Bundestag may express its lack of confidence in the Chancellor only by electing a successor with the majority of its members; the President must then appoint the person elected (Art. 67). If a motion of the Chancellor for a vote of confidence does not obtain the support of the majority of the Bundestag, the President may, upon the proposal of the Chancellor, dissolve the House within twenty-one days, unless it elects another Chancellor within this time (Art. 68).

VII. The Legislation of the Federation

The right of legislation lies with the Länder in so far as the Basic Law does not specifically accord legislative powers to the Federation. Distinction is made between fields of exclusive legislation of the Federation and fields of concurrent legislation of Bund and Länder. In the field of concurrent legislation the Länder may legislate so long and so far as the Federation makes no use of its legislative right. The Federation has this right only in so far as a matter cannot be effectively regulated by Land legislation, or the regulation by Land Law would prejudice other Länder, or if the preservation of legal or economic unity demands regulation by Federal Law. Exclusive legislation of the Federation is strictly limited to such matters as foreign affairs, citizenship, migration, currency, copyrights, customs, railways, post and telecommunications. In most other fields, as enumerated (Art. 74), concurrent legislation exists.

The legislative organ of the Federation is the Bundestag, into which Bills are introduced by the Government, by members of the Bundestag or by the Bundesrat (Art. 76). After their adoption they must be submitted to the Bundesrat, which may demand, within three weeks, that a committee of members of both houses be convened to consider the Bill (Art. 77). In so far as its express approval is not needed, the Bundesrat may veto a law within two weeks.

An alteration of the Basic Law requires a majority of two-thirds in both houses, but an amendment by which the division of the Federation into Länder and the basic principles contained in Articles 1 and 20 would be affected, is inadmissible (Art. 79).

The Federal Government or the Länder Governments may be authorized by law to issue ordinances. A state of legislative emergency for a Bill can be declared by the President on the request of the Government with the approval of the Bundesrat. If then the Bundestag again rejects the Bill, it may be deemed adopted nevertheless in so far as the Bundesrat approves it. An emergency may not last longer than six months and may not be declared more than once during the term of office of any one Government (Art. 81).

VIII. The Execution of Federal Laws and the Federal Administration

The Länder execute the Federal Laws as their own concern in so far as the Basic Law does not otherwise determine. In doing so, they regulate the establishment of the authorities and the administrative procedure, but the Federal Government exercises supervision in order to ensure that the Länder execute the Federal Laws in an appropriate manner. For this purpose the Federal Government may send commissioners to the Land authorities (Art. 84). Direct Federal administration is foreseen for the Foreign Service, Federal finance, Federal railways, postal services, Federal waterways and shipping.

In order to avert imminent danger to the existence of the democratic order, a Land may call in the police forces of other Länder; and if the Land in which the danger is imminent is itself not willing or able to fight the danger, the Federal Government may place the police in the Land, or the police forces in other Länder, under its instructions (Art. 91).

IX. The Administration of Justice

Judicial authority is invested in independent judges, who are subject only to the law and who may not be dismissed or transferred against their will (Art. 97).

Justice is exercised by the Federal Constitutional Court, by the Supreme Federal Court, by the Federal Courts and by the Courts of the Länder. The Federal Constitutional Court decides on the interpretation of the Basic Law in cases of doubt, on the compatibility of Federal Law or Land Law with the Basic Law, and on disputes between the Federation and the Länder or between different Länder. The Supreme Federal Court decides in cases where the decision is of importance for the uniformity of the administration of justice of the Higher Federal Courts. Higher Federal Courts are to be established for the spheres of ordinary, administrative, finance, labour and social jurisdiction. Extraordinary courts are inadmissible.

The freedom of the individual may be restricted only on the basis of a law. No one may be prevented from appearing before his lawful judge (Art. 101). Detained persons may be subjected neither to physical nor to mental ill-treatment. The police may hold no one in custody longer than the end of the day following the arrest without the decision of a court. Any person temporarily detained must be brought before a judge who shall inform him of the reasons of his arrest, at the latest on the following day. A person enjoying the confidence of the detainee must be notified forthwith of any continued duration of a deprivation of liberty. An act may be punished only if it was punishable by law before the act was committed, and no one may be punished more than once on account of the same criminal act. The death sentence shall be abolished.

X. Finance

The Federation has the right of exclusive legislation only on customs and financial monopolies; on most other taxes, especially on income, property and inheritance, it has concurrent legislation rights with the Länder (see VII above).

Customs, financial monopolies, excise taxes (with exception of the beer tax), the transportation tax, the turnover tax and property dues serving non-recurrent purposes, are administered by Federal finance authorities, and the revenues thereof accrue to the Federation. The remaining taxes are administered, as a rule, by the Länder and the Gemeinden to which they accrue. The Federation and the Länder shall be self-supporting and independent of each other in their budget economy (Art. 109). In order to ensure the working efficiency of the Länder with low revenues and to equalize the differing burden of expenditure of the Länder, the Federation may, however, make grants, and take the necessary funds from specific taxes accruing to the Länder. All revenues and expenditures of the Federation must be estimated for each fiscal year and included in the budget, which must be established by law before the beginning of the fiscal year. Decisions of the Bundestag or the Bundesrat which increase the budget expenditure proposed by the Federal Government require its approval (Art. 113).

XI. Transitional and Concluding Provisions

The Articles 116–146 regulate a number of disconnected matters of detail, such as the relation between the old Reich and the Federation, the Federal Government and Allied High Commission, the expenses for occupation costs which have to be borne by the Federation, and the status of former German nationals who now may regain their citizenship. Article 143 contains the threat of severe punishment to those who attempt to change by force the constitutional order of the Federation or of a Land, or to prevent the Federal President by force or the threat of danger from exercising his powers.

MAJOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

I. SOVEREIGNTY AND RESPONSIBILITY

An amending bill of 1954:

- (1) Laid down under an amendment to Article 73 of the Basic Law that the Federal Parliament had full powers to legislate in all matters relating to national defence "including obligatory national service for men over 18 years of age",
- (2) Introduced a new article (142A) which declared that "the treaties signed in Bonn and Paris on May 26th and 27th, 1952 (i.e. the Bonn Conventions and European Defence Community Treaty) were not contrary to the Federal Constitution".

Until September 1954 the operation of the Basic Law was conditioned by two further instruments: the first, the Occupation Statute of 1949 (with subsequent amendments) defining the rights and obligations of the United States, Great Britain and France with respect to Germany; and the second, the Bonn Conventions, designed to replace the Occupation Statute and to grant almost full sovereignty to the German people.

The Bonn Conventions, 1952

- (1) The Occupation Statute was abolished, and the Federal Government inherited full freedom in so far as the international situation permits.
- (2) Allied forces in Germany were no longer occupation forces, but part of "the defence of the free world, of which the Federal Republic and West Berlin form a part".
- (3) A number of problems which would normally be settled by a Peace Treaty were resolved; the Conventions were in effect a provisional treaty to end the war between the Federal Republic and the Three Powers, pending a final treaty between the whole of Germany and the Four. Under this heading the following provisions were made:

- (a) The Federal Republic would have full control over its internal and foreign affairs and relations with the Three Powers would be conducted through ambassadors.
- (b) Only because of the international situation would the Three Powers claim their rights regarding the stationing of armed forces on German soil, matters concerning Berlin, the reunification of Germany and the final Peace Treaty.
- (c) The Federal Republic undertook to conduct its policy according to the principles of the United Nations.
- (d) In their negotiations with states with which the Federal Republic has no relations, the Three Powers would consult with the Federal Government.
- (e) The Federal Republic would participate in the European Defence Community.
- (f) The Three Powers and the Federal Republic agreed that a freely negotiated peace settlement for the whole of Germany was their common aim, and that determination of the final boundaries of Germany must await such a treaty.

The Conventions also included supplementary contractual agreements concerning the rights and obligations of foreign troops in Germany, taxation of the armed forces, a Finance Convention, and a Convention on the settlement of matters arising out of the war and the occupation.

The London and Paris Agreements

The terms of the London Agreement of 1954 were that Germany and Italy should enter an expanded Brussels Treaty Organization; that German sovereignty should be restored and that Germany should, on agreed terms, enter NATO, and that an Agency for the control of armaments on the continent of Europe should be set up. The Paris Agreement later that year established the details of the points agreed in London.

German Sovereignty

On May 5th, 1955, with the depositing of the instruments of ratification of the London and Paris Agreements, the Federal Republic of Germany attained its sovereignty. The three-power status continues for the time being in West Berlin, but is modified by a declaration by the American, French and British Commandants.

II. OTHER AMENDMENTS

In June 1968 legislation was finally passed providing for emergency measures to be taken during a time of crisis.

The main provisions of this, the 17th Amendment to the Constitution, were to allow the authorities to place certain restrictions on the secrecy of correspondence and telecommunications, to conscript men into the armed forces and to use the armed forces to fight armed insurgents if the free democratic status of the Federal Republic or of any Land was threatened. A new Article 53a provided for the establishment of a committee of 33 members, two-thirds members of the Bundestag and one-third members of the Bundesrat, which must be informed by the Federal Government of any plans in the event of a defence emergency. The life of parliamentary bodies and the terms of office of the Federal President and his deputy might be extended during a defence emergency.

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

The Minister-President is elected by the Diet for four years. He appoints the Ministers and Secretaries of State with the consent of the Diet. The State Government is formed from the majority party (CSU).

Minister-President: FRANZ JOSEF STRAUSS.

The composition of the Diet, as a result of elections held on October 15th, 1978, is as follows:

President of Diet: Dr. FRANZ HEUBL (CSU).

CSU (Christian Social Union)	129 seats
SPD (Social Democratic Party)	65 "
FDP (Free Democratic Party)	10 "

The Senate, or second chamber, consists of sixty members, divided into ten groups representing professional interests, e.g. agriculture, industry, trade, free professions and religious communities. Every two years one-third of the Senate is replaced by elections.

President of the Senate: HIPPOLYT Freiherr VON POSCHINGER.

Bavaria is divided into seven districts: Mittelfranken,

The Land Governments, West Berlin, Political Parties

Oberfranken, Unterfranken, Schwaben, Niederbayern, Oberpfalz and Oberbayern. Each district is subdivided into a number of urban and rural districts.

SAARLAND

By the Constitution which came into force on January 1st, 1957, Saarland became politically integrated with the Federal Republic as a Land. It became economically integrated with the Federal Republic in July 1959.

The Minister President is elected by the Diet. The Government is formed by the CDU and the FDP.

Minister-President: WERNER ZEYER (CDU).

President of the Diet: ALBRECHT HEROLD (SPD).

CDU (Christian Democratic Union)	23 seats
SPD (Social Democratic Party)	24 "
FDP (Free Democratic Party)	4 "

WEST BERLIN

On August 4th, 1950, the Berlin City Assembly passed a Constitution defining its special position under technical three-power control. Under German Constitutional Law Berlin is a Land of the Federal Republic but this law is at present suspended by three-power reservations. Nevertheless West Berlin sends representatives to the Bundestag and Bundesrat in Bonn but these representatives have no vote in the plenary sessions of either House. To be valid in West Berlin, Federal Law has to be specially adopted there. The Constitution came into force on October 1st, 1950.

The House of Representatives (Abgeordnetenhaus) is the legislative body, and has 133 members. The executive agency is the Senate, which is composed of the Governing Mayor (Regierender Bürgermeister), his deputy, and at the most sixteen Senators. The Governing Mayor is elected by a majority of the House of Representatives. The Senate is responsible to the House of Representatives and dependent on its confidence.

Regierender Bürgermeister: Dr. RICHARD VON WEIZSÄCKER (CDU).

Bürgermeister and Senator of the Interior: HEINRICH LUNNER (CDU).

SENATORS (all CDU)

Federal Affairs: Dr. NORBERT BLÜM.

Finance: GERHARD KUNZ.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH

Until 1969 the Protestant churches in both the Federal and Democratic Republics were united in the Evangelische Kirche in Deutschland (E.K.D.), a federation established at the Conference of Eisenach (Thuringia) in 1948. In 1969, however, the churches in the Democratic Republic declared themselves organizationally independent and established the Bund der Evangelischen Kirchen in der D.D.R. Consequently the E.K.D. is now restricted to the Federal Republic and Berlin (West) only, but maintains links with the churches in the Democratic Republic.

The Vereinigte Evangelisch-Lutherische Kirche Deutschlands (V.E.L.K.D.), one of the federations within the E.K.D., also divided in 1968 and is paralleled in the Democratic Republic by the V.E.L.K.D.R. The Evangelische Kirche der Union (E.K.U.) is partly divided and spans both the Federal and the Democratic Republics.

About 43 per cent of the population of the Federal Republic (26.5 million) are members of the Protestant Church, the great majority belonging to churches forming the E.K.D. The total membership of the Lutheran churches is almost 13 million, of the United Churches about 13.5 million, and of the Reformed Churches about 448,000.

Outside the E.K.D. are numerous small Protestant Free Churches, such as the Baptists, Methodists, Mennonites and the Lutheran Free Church, with a membership of approximately 400,000 in all.

EVANGELISCHE KIRCHE IN DEUTSCHLAND

(The Protestant Church in Germany)

The governing bodies of the E.K.D. are its Synod of 120 clergy and lay members which meets at regular intervals, the Conference of member churches, and the Council, composed of 15 elected members. The E.K.D. has an ecclesiastical secretariat of its own (the Protestant Church Chancellery), and a special office for foreign relations.

THE PRESS

Article 5 of the 1949 Basic Law of the Republic stipulates: "Everyone has the right freely to express or to disseminate his opinion by speech, writing and pictures and freely to inform himself from generally accessible sources. Freedom of the press and freedom of reporting by radio and motion pictures are guaranteed. There shall be no censorship. These rights are limited by the provisions of the general laws, the provisions of the law for the protection of youth, and by the right to inviolability of personal honour." These last qualifications refer to the Federal law penalizing the sale to young people of literature judged to endanger morality, and to articles in the Penal Code relating to defamation, in particular Article 187A concerning defamation of public figures.

There is no Federal Press Law, all legal action being normally referred back to the Constitution. But the press is subject to general items of legislation some of which may significantly limit press freedom. Article 353C of the Penal Code for example, dating from the Nazi period, prohibits the publication of official news supposed to be secret; under it a journalist may be required to reveal his sources. The Code of Criminal Procedure also constitutes a danger in that it authorizes the government to confiscate objects potentially important as evidence in a legal investigation, which may be construed to include papers, print, etc.

Freedom of the press is stipulated in each of the Constitutions of the individual Länder. Many Länder have enacted laws defining the democratic role of the press and some give journalists access to sources of government information; some authorize the journalist to refuse to disclose his sources; others qualify, and even withhold this right. Some permit printed matter to be confiscated on suspicion of an indictable offence only if authorized by an independent judge; others allow a district attorney or even the police to give this authorization.

The German Press Council was founded in 1956 and is composed of publishers and journalists. It lays down guidelines, investigates complaints against the press and enjoys considerable standing.

The Federal German press is quite free of government control. No daily is directly owned by a political party, and though some 10 per cent of papers support a party line, the majority of newspapers, including all the major dailies, are politically independent.

The political and economic conditions since 1949 have fostered the rapid development of a few large publishing groups. The press situation has been under consideration by three government commissions, which have suggested various measures to halt the trend towards concentration.

The main press commission, the Günther commission, issued an interim report on May 22nd, 1968. The commission laid down various limits on the proportions of circulation one group should be allowed to control: (1) 40 per cent of the total circulation of newspapers or 40 per cent of the total circulation of magazines; (2) 20 per cent of the total circulation of newspapers and magazines together; (3) 15 per cent of the circulation in one field if the proportion owned in the other field is 40 per cent. At that time the Springer Group's estimated ownership was 39.2 per cent of newspaper circulation (65-70 per cent in Berlin) and 17.5 per cent of magazine circulation. In June Springer reduced his share of the periodical market to around 11 per cent.

In 1979 400 publishers produced about 1,240 newspapers compared with 2,900 which appeared in 1932. The most important and influential national dailies include Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, Süddeutsche Zeitung (Munich) and Die Welt (Hamburg). The newspaper with the largest circulation is Bild Zeitung (circ. 4,900,000) which is printed in eight different provincial centres. The most influential weekly newspapers include Die Zeit and the Sundays Bild am Sonntag and Welt am Sonntag. In 1978 about 9,400 periodicals were published, with a total circulation of over 200 million copies. Those with circulations of over 1 million included the illustrated news weeklies Der Spiegel, Stern and Quick, the TV and Radio magazine HÖRZU and women's magazines Brigitte, Burda-modern, Frau im Spiegel and Für Sie.

The principal newspaper publishing groups are:

Axel Springer Group (Propr. AXEL SPRINGER): 1000 Berlin 61, Kochstrasse 50, and 2000 Hamburg 36, Kaiser-

Wilhelm-Str. 6; the largest newspaper publishing group in continental Europe; includes five major dailies (Die Welt, Hamburger Abendblatt, Bild Zeitung, Berliner Morgenpost, B.Z.), two Sunday papers (Welt am Sonntag, Bild am Sonntag), two radio, television and family magazines (HÖRZU, Funk Uhr) and the book publishing firm Verlag Ullstein G.m.b.H.

Gruner und Jahr A.G. & Co. Druck- und Verlagshaus: 2210 Itzehoe, Am Vossberg, Postfach 1240, and 2000 Hamburg 36, Postfach 302040; owns Stern, Brigitte, Essen und Trinken, Geo, Capital, Eltern, Nicole, Häuser, Yps, Schöner Wohnen.

FINANCE

(cap.=capital; p.u.=paid up; brs.=branches; dep.=deposits; DM=Deutsche Mark; m.=million; res.=reserves)

The Deutsche Bundesbank, the central bank of the Federal Republic of Germany, consists of the central administration in Frankfurt (considered to be the financial capital of the country), eleven main offices (Landeszentralbanken) in the Länder and Berlin, and over 200 branches. In carrying out its functions as determined by law, the Bundesbank is independent of the Federal Government, but is required to support the Government's general economic policy. All other credit institutions are subject to governmental supervision through the Federal Banking Supervisory Office (Bundesaufsichtsamt für das Kreditwesen) in Berlin.

Banks outside the central banking system are divided into three groups: private commercial banks, credit institutions incorporated under public law and co-operative credit institutions. All these commercial banks are "universal banks", conducting all kinds of customary banking business. There is no division of activities. As well as the commercial banks there are a number of specialist banks, such as private or public mortgage banks.

The group of private commercial banks includes: those known as the "Big Three" (the Deutsche Bank, the Dresdner Bank and the Commerzbank); all banks incorporated as a company limited by shares (Aktiengesellschaft—A.G., Kommanditgesellschaft—K.G.a.A.) or as a private limited company (Gesellschaft mit beschränkter Haftung—G.m.b.H.) and which are known as "regional banks" because they do not usually function throughout the Federal Republic; and the private banks, which are run as sole proprietorships or partnerships and mostly have no branches outside their home town. Foreign banks are classed as regional banks. The main business of all private commercial banks is short-term lending. The private bankers fulfil the most varied tasks within the banking system.

The public low credit institutions are the savings banks and the Landesbanken. The latter act as central banks and clearing houses on a national level for the savings banks. Laws governing the savings banks limit them to certain sectors—credits, investments and money transfers—and they concentrate on the areas of home financing, municipal investments and the trades. In 1979 there were 603 savings banks and 12 Landesbanken under their umbrella organization Deutscher Sparkassen- und Giroverband.

The head institution of the co-operative system is the Deutsche Genossenschaftskasse. At the end of 1978 there were some 4,800 industrial and agricultural credit co-operatives with over 19,000 offices.

Central banking organizations were set up in 1948. The central organization for the private commercial banks is the German Bankers' Association (Bundesverband deutscher Banken), which consists of eleven provincial associations, the Association of Private Mortgage Banks (Verband privater Hypothekenbanken) and the Association of Private Shipping Banks (Verband privater Schiffsbanken). Other federal banking associations are the Association of German Industrial and Agricultural Credit Co-operatives (Bundesverband der Deutschen Volksbanken und Raiffeisenbanken) and the Association of Public-Law Credit Institutions (Verband öffentlicher Banken).

There are 14 nuclear power stations in operation with a total generating capacity of 9,062 MW in 1981.

Nuclear power stations in operation are: the AVR Project at Jülich (North Rhine-Westphalia), with a capacity of 15 MW; the VAK Project at Kahl/Main (Bavaria), with a capacity of 17 MW; the MZFR Project at Karlsruhe (Baden-Württemberg), with a capacity of 58 MW; the KWO Project at Obrigheim/Neckar (Baden-Württemberg), with a capacity of 345 MW; the KWW Project at Würgassen/Weser (North Rhine-Westphalia), with a capacity of 670 MW; the KKS Project at Stade/

Elbe (Lower Saxony), with a capacity of 662 MW; the Biblis A and Biblis B Projects at Biblis/Rhein (Hessen), with respective capacities of 1,204 MW and 1,300 MW; the KKB I project at Philippsburg (Baden-Württemberg), with a capacity of 960 MW; the KKB Project at Brunsbüttel/Elbe (Schleswig-Holstein), with a capacity of 805 MW; the GKN I Project at Neckarwestheim/Neckar (Baden-Württemberg), with a capacity of 855 MW; the KKN II Project at Karlsruhe, with a capacity of 21 MW; the KKU Project at Esenhamm (Lower Saxony), with a capacity of 1,300 MW; and the KKJ I Project at Ohu/Isar (Bavaria), with a capacity of 907 MW.

These nuclear power stations made a contribution of about 14 per cent to electricity supply in 1979.

Nine nuclear power plants with a total capacity of 9,903 MW are under construction: the KKG project at Grafenrheinfeld (Bavaria), with a capacity of 1,300 MW; the KWG project at Grohnde (Lower Saxony), with a capacity of 1,361 MW; the KRB II B project at Gundremmingen (Bavaria), with a capacity of 1,310 MW; the KRB II C project at Gundremmingen (Bavaria), with a capacity of 1,310 MW; the KKP II project at Philippsburg (Baden-Württemberg), with a capacity of 1,362 MW; the THTR-300 project at Hamm-Uentrop (North Rhine-Westphalia), with a capacity of 308 MW; the SNR-300 project at Kalkar (North Rhine-Westphalia), with a capacity of 327 MW; the KKK project at Krümmel (Schleswig-Holstein), with a capacity of 1,316 MW; and the Mulheim-Kärlich project (Rhineland Palatinate), with a capacity of 1,308 MW.

The construction of the following nuclear power plants has been halted by court rulings: the KWS 1 project at Wyhl (Baden-Württemberg), with a capacity of 1,362 MW; and the KBR project at Brokdorf (Schleswig-Holstein), with a capacity of 1,365 MW.

In addition, eleven more nuclear power plants are due to be constructed and start operation by the year 2000. Sites have been chosen at Biblis, Lingen, Neupotz (two plants), Neckarwestheim, Hamm, Ohu, Vakum (two plants), Borken and Rehling. These will have a total capacity of about 15,600 MW. The following nuclear power stations, which were demonstration plants and started operation in the mid-1960s, have been closed down: the KRB project at Gundremmingen (Bavaria), with a capacity of 250 MW; and the KWL project at Lingen (Lower Saxony), with a capacity of 268 MW.

The use of nuclear energy has given rise to much controversy in the Federal Republic and various protest groups have been formed. The Government started an information campaign in 1975 which aims to provide the public with information on nuclear energy and all related energy questions, including energy conservation.

GIBRALTAR

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag

The City of Gibraltar is a narrow peninsula running southwards from the south-west coast of Spain, to which it is connected by an isthmus. About 8 km. (5 miles) across the Bay to the west lies the Spanish port of Algeciras and 32 km. (20 miles) across the Strait of Gibraltar, to the south, is Morocco. The Mediterranean lies to the east. The climate is temperate, snow or frost being extremely rare. The mean minimum and maximum temperatures during the winter are 12°C (54°F) and 18°C (65°F) respectively, and during the summer they are 12°C (54°F) and 29°C (85°F) respectively; the average annual rainfall is 890 mm. (35 inches). The official language is English though the population is bilingual in English and Spanish. About 80 per cent of the population are Roman Catholic, 8 per cent are Muslim and 8 per cent Church of England. The flag (proportions two by one) bears the banner of the Gibraltar coat of arms (castle and key) on a background, the upper two-thirds of which are white and the lower third red.

Recent History

The post-war years of this British dependency have been marked by considerable progress socially and economically through intensive development of the medical, educational, housing and social security services, and by the expansion of business and the encouragement of tourism. There has also been considerable constitutional development resulting in partial self-government since 1964 and control over most internal matters since 1969.

The Spanish Government lays claim to Gibraltar as a part of its territory, whilst the United Kingdom maintains that the Treaty of Utrecht (1713) granted sovereignty over Gibraltar to the United Kingdom in perpetuity. Since 1963 Spain has intensified its campaign through the United Nations for the cession of Gibraltar to Spain and, when the United Kingdom failed to comply with the UN deadline for decolonization, imposed certain restrictions on Gibraltar in 1969. These included closing the land frontier, imposing an air space ban affecting aircraft landing at Gibraltar, removing the Algeciras Ferry (the only remaining means of direct access to Spain), withdrawing the Spanish labour force and cutting off telephone and telegraphic communications with Spain.

In pursuance of a UN resolution stating that the interests of the people of Gibraltar should be taken into account, the United Kingdom held a referendum in September 1967 in which the overwhelming majority voted for retaining their link with the United Kingdom rather than passing under Spanish sovereignty. This was followed by the drafting of a new Constitution, promulgated in 1969, and in the Preamble to the Constitution Order (1969) the British Government has given an undertaking never to enter into arrangements whereby the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes.

In an attempt to prevent attitudes hardening further, the British Government rejected an all-party programme of constitutional reform, presented by Gibraltar in June 1976, which would have strengthened ties with the United Kingdom. Spain's increasingly flexible attitude towards lifting the blockade on Gibraltar became apparent during talks held between Spanish and British ministers in November 1977, which for the first time included representatives of the Gibraltar Government as part of the British delegation.

Telephone links with Spain were restored at the end of 1977. In August 1979 the inhabitants of the border town of La Linea called for a normalization of relations between Spain and Gibraltar. In December Spain called for new negotiations and at meetings in April 1980 it was agreed in principle to reopen the frontier by June. However, the reopening was delayed by Spanish insistence on its workers in Gibraltar being allowed equal status with EEC citizens, and negotiations suffered a further setback when the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Gibraltar in August 1981 caused a diplomatic affront to Spain. It seemed likely that the frontier would not be reopened until Spain becomes a member of NATO, possibly in 1983. In October 1981 the British Parliament voted that Gibraltarians should have the right to retain full British citizenship.

Gibraltar joined the EEC with the United Kingdom in January 1973, under the provisions of the Treaty of Rome relating to European territories for whose external relations a member state is responsible, but at its own request is excluded from the Common External Tariff and Common Agricultural Policy.

Government

Gibraltar is a British Crown Colony, the Queen being represented by a Governor. Executive authority is vested in the Governor, who is advised by the Gibraltar Council composed of five elected and four ex officio members. The Council of Ministers is presided over by the Chief Minister. Since 1969 the Council of Ministers has been responsible for domestic affairs. The Gibraltar House of Assembly consists of a Speaker appointed by the Governor, fifteen elected members, and two ex officio members.

Defence

There is a local defence force, the Gibraltar Regiment, which, following the abolition of conscription, was re-organized as a Volunteer Reserve Unit. United Kingdom naval, army and air force units are stationed at Gibraltar, which is also a NATO sub-command.

Economic Affairs

In 1980 G.N.P. was estimated at £60 million. The main sources of income in the Gibraltar economy are British defence expenditure, particularly the Naval Dockyard and Base, tourist spending, payments for services to shipping and, to a lesser extent, finance centre activities. However, in May 1981 the British Government announced that the Naval Dockyard is to close in 1984.

The closure of the Spanish frontier and the withdrawal of Spanish labour in 1969 led to a substantial shortage of manpower. Training schemes have been introduced by the Government for a variety of industries to help overcome the loss of labour. The pre-closure level of economic activity is, however, maintained by Moroccan labour, which provided about a quarter of the total labour force of 12,000 in 1980. Tourism has been adapted to cater for longer-stay visitors in contrast to the larger numbers of day trippers who visited Gibraltar when the border was open. Earnings from tourism rose by 11 per cent in 1980 to £10 million, compared with a 30 per cent increase in 1979.

The construction industry ranks almost equal with the Naval Base and Dockyard as a source of employment. As over 70 per cent of the economy is in the public sector, the construction industry is very sensitive to changes in the level of government spending. Following a period of stagnation, the industry has benefited under the 1978-81 development programme. Expenditure under the programme was planned to be £28 million, of which half was to be provided by the United Kingdom. Capital development expenditure is currently running at an annual rate of £11 million. The Gibraltar Government finances its capital expenditure from external and local borrowing. An additional source of revenue, which is expanding, is the development of Gibraltar as a finance centre. The major areas of United Kingdom aid are education, housing and port development.

The retail price index rose by 8.5 per cent in 1980, compared with an increase of 14.5 per cent in 1979, and imports more than doubled between 1975 and 1980. However, with invisible earnings taken into account, the balance of payments showed a modest current surplus in 1980.

Transport and Communications

The Strait of Gibraltar is a main artery for sea traffic between the Mediterranean and Black Sea areas and Europe, the Americas, Africa, India, the Far East and Australia. A container service operates between Gibraltar and Sheerness, England. In 1980 87 cruise ships called at Gibraltar and a passenger and car-ferry service operates between Gibraltar and Tangier. Air services are frequent to the United Kingdom and Tangier. There are bus services and taxis but no railway.

Social Welfare

The Social Security system consists of two contributory schemes covering employment injuries insurance and social insurance benefits such as old age pensions, maternity and death grants, widows' benefit and unemployment benefit, and non-contributory schemes financed from the general revenue and covering retirement pensions, elderly persons' pensions, family allowances and supplementary benefits. There are special arrangements to cater for blind persons, the aged and discharged prisoners.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of 5 and 15 and is provided free in government schools. There are several nursery schools, twelve government primary schools, two Services schools administered by the Ministry of Defence for the children of military personnel, one private school and two comprehensive schools—one for boys and one for girls. Scholarships for university students are provided by the Government and from private sources.

Tourism

The airport and sea facilities have made Gibraltar a centre of communications for the West Mediterranean countries and North Africa. The restriction of land communications with Spain has stimulated the development of Gibraltar as a tourist centre in its own right, where the transient visitor is being replaced by the long-stay tourist. Package holidays are increasing. The expansion of hotels and the casino, the improvement of beaches and the provision of amenities have all contributed to this change. Conference facilities are being provided and cruise traffic is growing. Excluding hotel and travel costs, tourist spending in 1979 totalled an estimated £9.4 million. The number of visitors declined from 139,924 in 1974 to 119,366 in 1978 but had risen to 153,756 by 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: March 8th (Commonwealth Day), April 9th (Good Friday), April 12th (Easter Monday), May 3rd (May Day), May 31st (Spring Bank Holiday), June 14th (Queen's Official Birthday), August 30th (Late Summer Bank Holiday), December 25th, 27th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year).

Weights and Measures

Imperial weights and measures are in use (see United Kingdom), but the metric system is gradually being introduced.

GREECE

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Hellenic Republic is a mountainous peninsula between the Mediterranean and Aegean, bounded to the north by Albania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria and to the east by Turkey. Numerous Greek islands lie to the south, east and west, of which the largest is Crete. The climate is Mediterranean with mild winters and hot summers. The language is Greek, of which there are two forms—katharevousa, the formal language, and demotiki, the language commonly spoken and taught in schools. The Greek Orthodox Church is the established religion. The Greek national flag (proportions 3 by 2) displays a white cross on a blue ground. The capital is Athens.

Recent History

The liberation of Greece from the German occupation was followed by a civil war which lasted until 1949. The Communist forces were defeated, and the constitutional monarchy re-established. A succession of weak governments and conflicts between King Constantine and his ministers, and an alleged conspiracy involving Centres Union Officers, resulted in a coup led by right-wing army officers in April 1967. An attempted counter-coup led by the King failed and he went into exile. Colonel George Papadopoulos emerged as the dominant personality in the new regime, becoming Prime Minister in December 1967 and Regent in March 1972. The regime produced nominally democratic constitutional proposals, but all political activity was banned and opponents of the regime were expelled from all positions of power or influence.

Following an abortive naval mutiny, said to be supported by the exiled King, Greece was declared a republic in June 1973. In July 1973 George Papadopoulos was appointed President. Martial law was ended and a civilian cabinet appointed in preparation for elections to be held by the end of 1973. A student uprising at the Athens Polytechnic in November 1973 was bloodily repressed by the army, and another military coup overthrew Papadopoulos. Lieut.-Gen. Phaidon Ghizikis was appointed President, and a mainly civilian cabinet led by Adamantios Androussopoulos installed, but effective power lay with a small group of officers and the military police under Brig.-Gen. Demetrios Ioannides. As a result of the failure of the military junta's attempt to overthrow President Makarios of Cyprus and its inability to prevent the Turkish invasion of the island (see chapter on Cyprus), the Androussopoulos cabinet disintegrated in July 1974. President Ghizikis called Constantine Karamanlis, a former Prime Minister, back from exile to form a civilian Government of National Salvation. Martial law was ended, the press freed and political parties, including the Communists, were allowed to emerge. Elections were held in November 1974 which gave Karamanlis' New Democracy party an overwhelming majority in Parliament. A referendum in December 1974 rejected proposals for a return to constitutional monarchy, and in June 1975 a new republican Constitution, providing for a parliamentary democracy, was promulgated. In the same month Constantine Tsatsos was elected President.

In the general election of November 1977 the New Democracy party was re-elected with a reduced majority. In May 1980 Karamanlis was elected President and resigned as Prime Minister. The new leader of the New Democracy party, George Rallis, formed a government, reshuffling the previous cabinet. He faced a growing challenge from the rising Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK). In the general election of October 1981 PASOK gained an absolute majority in Parliament and its leader, Andreas Papandreou, became Prime Minister of the first socialist government in Greek history, committed to implementing a programme of reform which includes improvements in education, health and social security and significant support for farmers. At its most extreme, this would also include withdrawal from NATO and the EEC and the adoption of a policy of non-alignment.

In 1980 and 1981 some progress was made in resolving the dispute between Greece and Turkey over the Aegean. Both countries withdrew their claims to the control of air traffic over the Aegean, but the basic problem of delimitation of the continental shelf still remained. In October 1980 Greece returned to the military structure of NATO. This was made possible when both Greece and Turkey agreed to separate the issues of re-entry and jurisdiction in the Aegean. During 1981 negotiations were held between Greece and the U.S.A. on the future status of important military bases in the country but, when no complete agreement was reached, these talks were suspended until after the general election. The treaty of accession to the European Communities was signed in May 1979, and Greece became a full member in January 1981.

Government

Under the Constitution of June 1975 the President is Head of State and is elected by Parliament for a five-year term. The President appoints the Prime Minister and, upon his recommendation, the other members of the Government. The Government must enjoy the confidence of Parliament. The unicameral Parliament comprises not fewer than 200 and not more than 300 deputies, directly elected by universal adult suffrage for four years.

Defence

Greece returned to the military structure of NATO in October 1980 after an absence of six years. Military service is compulsory and lasts 22–26 months. In 1978 women were given the right to volunteer for military service of 30–50 days' basic training and for specialized training. In July 1981 the armed forces numbered 193,500, of whom 150,000 were conscripts, and consisted of an army of 150,000, a navy of 19,000 and an air force of 24,500; there was a gendarmerie of 30,000 and also a National Guard of 100,000. Estimated defence expenditure for 1980 totalled 71,250 million drachmae.

Economic Affairs

Greece has traditionally been an agricultural nation, producing most of its own needs and exporting a considerable amount of produce. The country produces large quantities of wheat, barley, maize, tobacco, sugar beet, tomatoes and dried and fresh fruit. However, since 1960 there has been a rapid increase in the importance of industry. Agricultural products accounted for 91.45 per cent of all exports in 1960, but in 1980 they accounted for only 25 per cent. Agriculture provided 17.9 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980 and manufacturing 19.4 per cent.

Mineral resources are intensively exploited, and a major development in the progress of the Greek economy has been the processing of an expanding proportion of the ores in Greece, rather than exporting raw materials. Electricity output nearly doubled between 1966 and 1971, power stations having been built to use lignite deposits and reduce dependence on imported fuel. In 1980, 66 per cent of the total value of exports was spent on imported oil and it was estimated that this would rise to 75 per cent in 1981. Hydro-electric power resources are being developed and in June 1981 oil production began in the North Aegean, representing an estimated 13 per cent of Greece's annual requirements. To replace power generated from lignite deposits, which are expected to run out in the 1990s, Greece had plans to build nuclear power stations, but the project was temporarily halted in 1981, partly due to a series of unusually severe and widespread earthquakes. Industry is being encouraged to switch from petroleum to alternative sources of power, principally coal. In 1979 uranium deposits were discovered in northern Greece and in 1981 a natural gas field was discovered off the western Peloponnese.

Industrialization and the expansion of exports, which increased six-fold between 1969 and 1977, have not saved Greece from a large balance of payments deficit. In 1980 the annual deficit increased by 17.8 per cent over 1979 to reach $2,217 million. This increase was due to a large rise, for the second consecutive year, in the cost of oil imports. The deficit is partly offset by earnings from tourism and shipping and by workers' remittances from abroad.

The country's principal trading partner is the EEC. Under the transitional arrangements, subsequent to joining the EEC in January 1981, Greece agreed to remove all remaining tariff and quantitative controls by 1986. Greek agriculture was to be aligned with EEC policy over a period of seven years, with farm prices being raised gradually to meet the higher community level.

The military junta left behind a stagnant economy, stifled by bureaucratic controls, and galloping inflation. However, by 1975 the Karamanlis Government had restored confidence in the economy and foreign investment rose considerably. The inflation rate in 1978 was 12.5 per cent, the lowest in recent years, but rose from 24.8 per cent in 1979 to 26.2 per cent in 1980, in spite of price freezes on electricity and other services, and restraints on government expenditure and the import of luxury goods. The growth rate fell to 1.9 per cent in 1980, compared with 3.7 per cent in 1979. This slowing down in growth was largely due to the adverse effects of the rise in price of crude oil on the rate of inflation and on domestic demand.

Transport and Communications

In 1980 Greece had a railway network of 2,548 km. of track. A road network of 37,132 km. covered the country in 1980. The 6-km. Corinth Canal shortens the sea journey from the Adriatic to Piraeus (port of Athens) by 325 km. Greece has a large mercantile marine with a total displacement of 40.6 million gross tons in September 1980. Important towns and islands are connected by air transport.

Social Welfare

There is a state social insurance scheme for wage-earners. Salaried staff are provided for by voluntary or staff insurances. Everyone is entitled to an old-age pension and sickness benefit.

Education

Education is free at all levels, and compulsory for all children between the ages of 6 and 15. Just under one million children receive primary education and some 585,130 secondary (1978/79). The illiteracy rate has been reduced from 72 per cent to less than 10 per cent in the last thirty years. Demotiki, the vernacular language, has replaced the formal katharevousa in secondary education, and a system of technical lycées is being expanded.

Tourism

The sunny climate, the natural beauty of the country and its great history and traditions have made Greece a magnet for tourists. There are numerous islands of archaeological interest. The industry is expanding rapidly with the improvement of transport and accommodation facilities. The number of tourists visiting Greece rose dramatically from 1.0 million in 1968 to 5.3 million in 1980. Earnings from tourism, U.S. $120 million in 1968, amounted to $1,733 million in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: March 1st (Shrove Monday), March 25th (National Day), April 16th-19th (Greek Orthodox Easter), May 1st (Labour Day), June 7th (Holy Spirit Day), August 15th (Assumption of the Virgin Mary), October 28th ("Ochi" Day, anniversary of Greek defiance of Italy's 1940 ultimatum), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day), January 6th (Epiphany).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 lepta = 1 drachma.

Exchange rates (October 1981):

£1 sterling = 103.86 drachmae;

U.S. $1 = 55.85 drachmae.

100 lepta (singular, lepta) = 1 drachma.

Coins: 10, 20 and 50 lepta; 1, 2, 5, 10 and 20 drachmae.

Notes: 50, 100, 500 and 1,000 drachmae.

1,000 drachmae = £9.63 = $17.91.

Note: The new drachma, equal to 1,000 old drachmae, was introduced in May 1954. From April 1953 the exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 30,000 old drachmae, so the initial rate for the new currency was $1 = 30 drachmae. Despite two devaluations of the U.S. dollar, this exchange rate remained in force until March 1975, except when the drachma was allowed to "float" between October and December 1973. Since March 1975 the drachma has again been "floating", with its valuation based on the average of a sample group of currencies of Greece's main trading partners. The average market rate (drachmae per U.S. dollar) was: 32.287 in 1975; 36.518 in 1976; 36.838 in 1977; 36.745 in 1978; 37.038 in 1979. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 72.00 drachmae from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 78.17 drachmae (1 drachma = 1.297p) from December 1971 to June 1972.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Constitution of 1975 provides for the establishment of a Special Supreme Tribunal. Other provisions in the constitution provided for a reorganization of parts of the judicial system to be accomplished through legislation.

Special Supreme Tribunal: 30 Patision St., Athens; this court has final jurisdiction in matters of constitutionality.

Council of State: Old Palace Bldg., Athens; the Council of State has appellate powers over acts of the administration upon application by civil servants or other civilians.

The Supreme Court: 12 Panepistimiou St., Athens; this is the supreme court in the State, having also appellate powers. It consists of four sections, three Civil and one Penal, and adjudicates in quorum.

Courts of Appeal. These are 12 in number. They have jurisdiction in cases of Civil and Penal Law of second degree, and, in exceptional penal cases, of first degree.

Courts of First Instance. There are 59 Courts of First Instance with jurisdiction in cases of first degree, and in exceptional cases, of second degree. They function both as Courts of First Instance and as Criminal Courts. For serious crimes the Criminal Courts function with a jury.

In towns where Courts of First Instance sit there are also Juvenile Courts. Commercial Tribunals do not function in Greece, and all commercial cases are tried by ordinary courts of law. There are, however, Tax Courts in some towns.

Courts of the Justice of Peace. There are 360 of these courts throughout the country.

Magistrates' Courts (or simple Police Courts). There are 48.

In all the above courts, except those of the Justice of Peace, there are District Attorneys. In Courts of the Justice of Peace the duties of District Attorney are performed by the Public Prosecutor.

RELIGION

THE ORTHODOX CHURCH OF GREECE

The Greek branch of the Holy Eastern Orthodox Church is the officially established religion of the country, adhered to by nearly 97 per cent of the population. The administrative body of the Church is the Holy Synod of 12 members, elected by the 76 bishops of the Hierarchy.

Primate of Greece: Archbishop SERAPHIM of Athens.

Within the Greek State there is also the semi-autonomous Church of Crete, composed of seven Metropolitans and the Holy Archbishopric of Crete. The Church is administered by a Synod consisting of the seven Metropolitans under the Presidency of the Archbishop; it is under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Oecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople, which also maintains a degree of administrative control.

Archbishop of Crete: Archbishop TIMOTHEOS (whose See is in Heraklion).

There are also four Metropolitan Sees of Dodecanese, which are spiritually and administratively dependent on the Oecumenical Patriarchate and, finally, the peninsula of Athos, which constitutes the region of the Holy Mountain (Mount Athos) and comprises twenty monasteries. These are dependent on the Oecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople, but are autonomous and are safeguarded constitutionally.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH

LATIN RITE

There are an estimated 46,700 Roman Catholics in Greece.

HUNGARY

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Hungarian People's Republic lies in Eastern Europe, bounded to the north by Czechoslovakia, to the east by the U.S.S.R. and Romania, to the south by Yugoslavia and to the west by Austria. Its climate is continental with long, dry summers and severe winters. The language is Hungarian (Magyar). Roman Catholics are the largest single religious denomination, claiming between three and four million adherents. Other groups are the Hungarian Reformed Church, the Lutheran Church and the Hungarian Orthodox Church. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) consists of three equal horizontal stripes of red, white and green. The capital is Budapest.

Recent History

Hungary allied itself with Germany before the Second World War and obtained additional territory when Czechoslovakia was partitioned in 1938 and 1939. Having sought to break the alliance in 1944, Hungary was occupied by German forces. In January 1945 Hungary was liberated by Soviet troops and signed an armistice, restoring the pre-1938 frontiers. It became a republic in February 1946. The Communist Party took power in May-June 1947. Land redistribution and nationalization measures followed, despite opposition from the Roman Catholic Church under Cardinal József Mindszenty. The Communists merged with the Socialists to form the Hungarian Workers' Party in June 1948 and a People's Republic was established in August 1949.

Mátyás Rákosi became the leading figure as First Secretary of the Workers' Party. Opposition was subsequently removed by means of purges and political trials. Rákosi became Prime Minister in 1952 but after the death of Stalin a year later lost this post to the more moderate Imre Nagy, and a short period of liberalization followed. Rákosi, however, remained as First Secretary of the Party and in 1955 Nagy was forced to resign. András Hegedüs, sponsored by Rákosi, was appointed Prime Minister. In-fighting between the Rákosi and Nagy factions increased in 1956 after the condemnation of Stalinism at the 20th CPSU Congress in Moscow; in July Rákosi was forced to resign but was replaced by a close associate, Ernő Gerő.

The consequent discontent led to demonstrations and in October 1956 fighting broke out. Nagy was returned as Prime Minister and headed a series of governments. He promised various controversial reforms, but fighting continued and in November a new government headed by János Kádár was set up. Soviet troops, stationed in Hungary under the 1947 peace treaty, were asked to intervene. Kádár also took over as head of the newly formed Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party (HSWP). He held the premiership until 1958 and from 1961 to 1965 but, even when not formally in the government, his Party leadership has made him the dominant figure in political life.

Economic reforms, in particular those introduced in 1968, have brought a considerable increase in the standard of living and they have been accompanied by modest social and political reforms. Since 1971 the electorate has had the opportunity to nominate two or more candidates for a given constituency, thus providing wider representation in the National Assembly. The electoral law was amended before the 1975 election to extend the life of the Assembly from four to five years. The elections of June 1980 resulted in a 99.3 per cent vote in favour of the Patriotic People's Front (dominated by the HSWP).

In April 1978 Béla Biszku, who had been regarded as Kádár's deputy, was retired from the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the HSWP. At the Party Congress in March 1980 Kádár was re-elected First Secretary of the Central Committee; five members of the Politburo were not reappointed. An extensive government reshuffle was carried out in June. Changes included the election of six new members to the Presidential Council and the removal of two Deputy Chairmen from the Council of Ministers. In January 1981 three industrial ministries were merged into a single Ministry of Industry to improve co-ordination, and in October the new State Office for Wages and Labour began to function.

Hungary is closely aligned with the countries of Eastern Europe through its membership of the Warsaw Pact. In 1980 the first Hungarian cosmonaut was launched into orbit on a joint space mission with the U.S.S.R. Relations with the West, particularly Austria, France and the Federal Republic of Germany, are improving steadily.

Government

Under the 1949 Constitution, the highest organ of state power in the Hungarian People's Republic is the unicameral National Assembly, with 352 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage (at the last election, in June 1980, 337 members were elected unopposed, compared with 318 in 1975, while 15 seats were each contested by two candidates). The Assembly elects from its members a Presidential Council (21 members were elected in 1980) to be its permanent organ and the state's executive authority, responsible to the Assembly. The Council, led by a President, collectively acts as the Head of State. The Council of Ministers, the highest organ of state administration, is elected by the Assembly on the recommendation of the Presidential Council.

Political power is held by the Communist HSWP, the only legal party, which dominates the Patriotic People's Front. The Front presents an approved list of candidates, nominated at public meetings, for elections to representative bodies. No other candidates are permitted. Any body or individual may nominate a candidate, but must receive the backing of at least 30 per cent of those at the meeting for the nomination to be valid. The HSWP's highest authority is the Party Congress, which elects a Central Committee (127 members were elected in March 1980) to supervise Party work. The Central Committee elects a Political Committee (Politburo) of 13 members to direct policy.

For local administration Hungary is divided into 19 counties and the capital city with 22 districts.

Defence

Hungary was a founder member of the Warsaw Pact in 1955 and in 1969 joined the Geneva Disarmament Commission. Military service starts at the age of 18 years and lasts for 18 months. Total regular forces in July 1981 numbered 101,000: army 80,000, air force 21,000 and a marine force. There is also an armed force of 15,000 border guards and 60,000 Workers' Militia. The 1981 defence budget was 19,060 million forints.

Economic Affairs

In 1968 a new system of economic management was introduced, known as the "new economic mechanism". The official definition of the plan was "to harmonize State planning and market development". Until then the economy had been based on the standard Soviet central planning system, but under the new scheme industry has been decentralized to a certain extent, with the aim of evolving a socialist market economy. Proposals to encourage the further development of private enterprise were published in October 1981.

During the fourth Five-Year Plan (1971-75) national income rose by 35 per cent over the previous five-year period, industrial production increased by 38 per cent, and agricultural output by 18 per cent. Investment expanded by 40 per cent, and foreign trade turnover went up by 60 per cent.

The 1976-80 Plan laid emphasis on the modernization of industry. As a result of higher costs for raw materials and less favourable conditions of trade, the targets of this Plan were scaled down. National income increased by 20 per cent instead of 30-32 per cent. (In 1980 national income declined by 0.8 per cent on 1979). Industrial production rose by 18-19 per cent and agricultural output by 13 per cent. Investment, originally scheduled to increase by 25 per cent, was severely curtailed; one-third of the total invested in capital projects was absorbed by the Paks nuclear power station scheme.

The sixth Five-Year Plan (1981-85) calls for continued austerity and stresses the need for greater efficiency and profitability. It is hoped that present living standards can be maintained, and the housing, education and health services improved. A five-day working week is being implemented. An increase of 14-17 per cent in national income is envisaged. Industrial production should rise by 19-22 per cent, and the construction, engineering and chemical industries in particular are being greatly expanded. Agricultural output is planned to go up by 12-15 per cent. Per caput real income is expected to rise by 6-7 per cent. Total exports should increase by 37-39 per cent and imports by 18-19 per cent. Higher quality goods that are competitive on the world market are being produced. A uniform exchange rate for the forint was introduced in October 1981, and convertibility is scheduled for 1982. Other measures include the rationalization of the price system.

Hungary is an exporter of rolled steel, engineering products, machine tools, buses, telecommunications and electrical equipment, electronic instruments, pharmaceuticals, clothing and footwear, and also meat, fruit, vegetables and wine. About 94 per cent of arable land is state or co-operatively owned, and in 1980 agriculture and the food industry accounted for 25 per cent of G.N.P.

Vineyards covered a total of 168,000 hectares in 1980. Principal imports are crude petroleum, iron ore, copper and copper products, raw materials for the plastics industry, chemical fibres, artificial fertilizers, paper, cotton, animal foodstuffs and capital and consumer goods. Hungary imported 52 per cent of its energy requirements in 1980.

Foreign trade usually accounts for about 50 per cent of the G.N.P. The value of exports diminished by 0.4 per cent in 1980 compared to 1979, and that of imports by 2.9 per cent. Hungary is a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) and, since 1973, of GATT. Trade with members of the CMEA, mainly the U.S.S.R., accounts for over half of total foreign trade. The Federal Republic of Germany is Hungary's second largest trading partner, accounting for one-third of exchanges with the West. In 1980 Hungary achieved a surplus in its balance of payments with the West, the first since 1973. There still remains, however, a deficit on trade with CMEA.

Transport and Communications

The Hungarian State Railways operate over 8,000 km. of track, of which 1,479 km. are electrified. There are over 200 km. of motorways and 30,000 km. of main or secondary roads. Navigable inland waterways total some 1,688 km. There is a small merchant fleet. The state airline MALEV has an extensive network of flights to Europe and the Middle East, but there are no internal flights in Hungary.

Social Welfare

The national insurance scheme is largely non-contributory. Employees contribute between 3 and 10 per cent of salary to the pension fund. The employer pays 4 per cent for each person employed. Cost of health services and other social services is met by state subsidies and contributions from the place of work. The 1980 state budget allotted 20,500 million forints to health and social welfare.

A uniform system of pensions was introduced in 1975: workers draw between 33 and 75 per cent of their earnings, according to the number of years of service. Male workers are usually entitled to old-age pensions at the age of 60 and women at 55. There are also invalid pensions, widows' pensions, and orphans' allowances.

Social insurance covers sickness benefits. Patients are entitled to sick pay for one year, or two years in the case of tuberculosis. All medical consultation and treatment is free, although a charge of 15 per cent of the total price is generally made for medicines and medical appliances. In 1980 there were 30.1 physicians and 95.5 hospital beds per 10,000 of the population. The social insurance scheme also covers maternity benefits.

Education

Children under the age of 3 years attend creches (bölcsődék), and those between the ages of 3 and 6 years attend kindergartens (óvodák). They are not compulsory, but in 1980 about 87 per cent of children in this age group were attending. Compulsory education begins for the Hungarian child at 6 years of age when he attends the basic school (általános iskola). Basic education continues until the child is 14, during which time he will be taught general subjects together with some practical training. Provision is made in the basic school for talented children, particularly those who are linguistically inclined. Children attend school until the age of 16 years. There are four types of secondary school, excluding special schools for the very gifted or, alternatively, the backward or abnormal child. The majority of children prefer to continue with their education after 16 years of age. The most popular types of secondary school are the grammar school (gimnázium) and the secondary vocational schools (technikum). The gimnázium provides a four-year course of mainly academic studies, although some vocational training does figure on the curriculum. The technikum offers full vocational training together with a general education, emphasis being laid on practical work. Apprentice training schools (ipari tanulók gyakorló iskolái) are attached to factories, agricultural co-operatives, etc., and lead to full trade qualifications. General education is less important as part of the curriculum in this type of school. Further educational reform is being directed at revising the curricula and the way in which the performance of pupils is assessed. There are 57 higher institutes, including 9 universities and 9 technical universities.

HUNGARY

Tourism

Tourism has developed rapidly and is an important source of foreign exchange, earning U.S. $180 million in

Introductory Survey, Statistical Survey

1980. Lake Balaton is the main holiday centre for boating, bathing and fishing. The cities have great historical and recreational attractions. Budapest has numerous swimming pools watered by thermal springs. In 1980 there were 13,996,000 foreign visitors, 1.1 million fewer than in 1979. There are 34,000 hotel rooms.

Public Holidays

1982: April 4th (Liberation Day), April 12th (Easter Monday), May 1st (Labour Day), August 20th (Constitution Day), November 7th (October Revolution Day), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Note: Prior to August 1971 the forint was officially valued at 8.52 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 11.737 forints). Between December 1971 and February 1973 the value was 9.25 cents ($1 = 10.81 forints). In terms of sterling, the basic exchange rate between November 1967 and June 1972 was £1 = 28.169 forints (1 forint = 3.55 pence). Since January 1st, 1976, the basic rate, used for calculating the value of foreign trade, has been dispensed with. From October 1981 the two-tier system of commercial and non-commercial rates was replaced by a unified exchange rate. The average commercial value of the forint (in U.S. cents) was: 10.53 in 1973; 10.93 in 1974; 11.67 in 1975; 2.405 in 1976; 2.442 in 1977; 2.631 in 1978; 2.811 in 1979; 3.083 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Summary of the main provisions of the Constitution adopted on August 18th, 1949; amended April 1972.)

NATIONAL STATUS

Hungary is a People's Republic, a State of workers and working peasants, in which all power belongs to the working people and is exercised through elected representatives. The Republic defends the power and liberty of the working people and the independence of the country and opposes the exploitation of man.

SOCIAL STRUCTURE

The bulk of the means of production is owned by the State, by public bodies or by co-operative organizations, and state and co-operative ownership enjoy equal status. Means of production may also be privately owned. The national economy is directed by the State power of the people. The economic life of the Republic is determined by a State national economic plan in which the State strives to expand the forces of production, increase national wealth, raise material and cultural standards and strengthen the defences of the country. All natural resources, means of communication, banks, mines and major industrial plants are the property of the State. Foreign trade is carried out both by state trading companies and by companies and enterprises with export-import rights.

The Republic recognizes and guarantees the right of the working peasants to the land and regards it as its duty to assist the socialist development of agriculture. The State supports every genuine co-operative movement of the workers that is directed against exploitation. The Constitution recognizes and protects all property acquired by labour and guarantees the right of inheritance. Private enterprise is not allowed to run counter to the public interest.

Labour is the base of the social order and every able-bodied citizen has the right and the duty to work to the best of his ability. By their labour, the workers serve the cause of socialist construction.

GOVERNMENT

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The highest organ of State authority in the Hungarian People's Republic is the National Assembly which exercises all the rights deriving from the sovereignty of the people and determines the organization, direction and conditions of government. The National Assembly enacts laws, determines the State budget, decides the national economic plan, elects the Presidential Council and the Council of Ministers, directs the activities of ministries, decides upon declaring war and concluding peace and exercises the prerogative of amnesty.

The National Assembly is elected for a term of five years and members enjoy immunity from arrest and prosecution without parliamentary consent. It meets at least twice a year and is convened by the Presidential Council or by a written demand of one-third of its members. It elects a President, two deputy Presidents and six recorders from among its own members, and it lays down its own rules of procedure and agenda. As a general rule, the sessions of the National Assembly are held in public.

The National Assembly has the right of legislation which can be initiated by the Presidential Council, the Council of Ministers or any member of the National Assembly. Decisions are valid only if at least half of the members are present, and they require a simple majority. Constitutional changes require a two-thirds majority. Acts of the National Assembly are signed by the President and the Secretary of the Presidential Council. The National Assembly may set up committees.

The National Assembly may pronounce its dissolution before the expiration of its term, and in the event of an emergency may prolong its mandate or may be re-convened after dissolution. A new National Assembly must be elected within three months of dissolution and convened within one month of polling day. At its first sitting the National Assembly elects from among its members the Presidential Council, consisting of a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary and seventeen members. The Chairman of the Council of Ministers, its Deputy Chairmen and its members are ineligible for election to the Presidential Council.

Members of the National Assembly are elected on the basis of universal, equal and direct suffrage by secret ballot, and they are accountable to their constituents, who may recall them. All citizens of eighteen years and over have the right to vote, with the exception of those who are unsound of mind, and those who are deprived of their civil rights by a court of law.

PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL

The Presidential Council may issue the writ for a general election, convene the National Assembly, initiate legislation, hold plebiscites, direct local government, conclude international treaties, appoint diplomatic representatives, ratify international treaties, appoint higher civil servants and officers of the armed forces, award orders and titles, and exercise the prerogative of mercy. It may annul or modify by-laws, dissolve local organs of government and, when the National Assembly is not in session, may enact laws. The Presidential Council is responsible to the National Assembly, which can recall it.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The highest organ of State administration is the Council of Ministers, responsible to the National Assembly and consisting of a Chairman, Deputy Chairmen, Ministers of State and other Ministers who are elected by the National Assembly on the recommendation of the Presidential Council. The Council of Ministers directs the work of the ministries (listed in a special enactment), and ensures the enforcement of laws and the fulfilment of economic plans; it may issue decrees and annul or modify measures taken by any central or local organ of government.

LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

The local organs of State power are the county, district, town, borough and town precinct councils, whose members are elected for a term of five years by the voters in each area. Local councils direct economic, social and cultural activities in their area, prepare local economic plans and budgets and supervise their fulfilment, enforce laws, supervise subordinate organs, maintain public order, protect public property and individual rights, direct local economic enterprises and support co-operatives. They may issue regulations and annul or modify those of subordinate councils. Local Councils are administered by an Executive Committee elected by and responsible to them.

JUDICATURE

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court of the Hungarian People's Republic, county and district courts. The Supreme Court exercises the right of supervising in principle the judicial activities and practice of all other courts.

All judicial offices are filled by election; Supreme Court, county and district court judges are all elected for an indefinite period; the President of the Supreme Court is elected by the National Assembly. All court hearings are public unless otherwise prescribed by law, and those accused are guaranteed the right of defence. An accused person must be considered innocent until proved guilty.

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR

The function of the Chief Public Prosecutor is to watch over the observance of the law. He is elected for a period of six years by the National Assembly, to whom he is responsible. The organization of public prosecution is under the control of the Chief Public Prosecutor, who appoints the public prosecutors.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF CITIZENS

The Hungarian People's Republic guarantees for its citizens the right to work and to remuneration, the right of rest and recreation, the right to care in old age, sickness or disability, the right to education, and equality before the law; women enjoy equal rights with men. Discrimination on grounds of sex, religion or nationality is a punishable offence. The State also ensures freedom of conscience, religious worship, speech, the Press and assembly. The right of workers to organize themselves is stressed in order to promote democracy, socialist construction, cultural and educational development and international solidarity. The freedom of the individual, and the privacy of the home and of correspondence are inviolable. Freedom for creative work in the sciences and the arts is now also guaranteed by the Constitution under the amendments adopted in 1972.

The Constitution, The Government, Legislature

The basic freedoms of all workers are guaranteed and foreign citizens enjoy the right of asylum.

It is the fundamental duty of all citizens to defend the property of the people, consolidate social assets, increase economic strength, raise the living standards and cultural level of the workers, and strengthen the people's democratic system. Military service and the defence of their country are the duties of all citizens.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Hungarian judicial system was established by a law passed in 1954. This was modified by acts of parliament passed in 1962 and 1972. The administration of justice is the function of the county district courts, the municipal district courts, labour courts, the county courts, the Municipal Court of Budapest and the Supreme Court. The system of appeal is as follows: appeals against the decisions of county district courts and municipal district courts are considered by the county courts or the Municipal Court of Budapest. Appeals against the decisions of the latter as court of first instance are considered by the Supreme Court. The Chief Public Prosecutor and the President of the Supreme Court have the right to submit to the Supreme Court protest on legal grounds against the final decision of any court.

Under the 1971 act which came into force on January 1st, 1972, procedure is now differentiated for criminal offences which cover minor infringements of the law, and for crimes. In the first instance, cases involving a criminal offence can be dealt with by a professional judge. Where a crime is involved, the case is heard before a Council of Three, consisting of one professional judge and two lay assessors, and, in major cases, before a Council of Five, consisting of two professional judges and three lay assessors. In the second instance and at the Supreme Court, only regular judges may preside. The President of the Supreme Court is elected by Parliament for five years and all judges are elected by the Presidential Council for an indefinite period. The lay assessors are elected by the local councils.

The Chief Public Prosecutor is responsible for exercising supervision over legality in all fields except the function of the courts, the latter being entrusted to the Minister of Justice.

President of the Supreme Court: Dr. JENŐ SZILBEREKY.

Minister of Justice: Dr. IMRE MARKÓJA.

THE PRESS

The Hungarian Constitution guarantees freedom of the Press and freedom of speech, but the Press is in fact constrained to promote the ideological aims of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party and fundamental criticism of the political system is not permitted. On the other hand, failures in public administration, economic, cultural and other fields, are commonly criticized in editorials and grievances publicized in letters from members of the public. Since 1963 all official institutions so criticized have been legally obliged to investigate the matter promptly.

Conversely, considerable legislation is designed to prevent the abuse of Press rights; Article 127 of the penal code penalizes the provoking of hatred of minorities by the Press; incitement and libel are similarly dealt with. Since a decree in 1959, persons and institutions victimized by false Press reports may claim rectification which a government minister is empowered to enforce.

No body has the right to exercise censorship but after the crisis of 1956 a Government Information Office was set up, with nation-wide authority over the press, including the right to grant licences and ensure newsprint distribution, and the task of seeing that all government decrees and decisions are made available to the press. The national news agency, Magyar Távirati Iroda (MTI), handles the bulk of foreign news and has bilateral agreements with the major world agencies.

As in many East European countries most papers are the organs of political parties, trade unions, youth and social organizations. A wide range of specialist periodicals is published by societies, factories, scientific institutions, etc.

There is no private ownership of publications but since 1957 independent commercial organizations have received publishing licences.

The high circulation of daily papers enables publishing houses to produce high standard specialized periodicals. Moreover, the state gives direct subsidies to certain education, medicine and literature publications, to the religious press and to the four minority language papers. Some 80 per cent of newspapers are sold by subscription.

There are 29 dailies with an average total circulation of 2,826,000 (1978). These include 21 provincial dailies which have a combined daily circulation of about 1,077,000. Four of the five Budapest dailies sell a total of about 1,445,000 copies and circulate nationally. In order of popularity they are: Népszabadság (758,000), Népszava (302,000), the evening Esti Hírlap (256,000) and Magyar Nemzet (129,000). Népszabadság, the most important daily, is the central organ of the Socialist Workers' Party. Otherwise the paper most respected for the quality of its news coverage and commentary is Magyar Nemzet.

Weekly newspapers and periodicals number 59; there are 108 fortnightly journals and 362 monthlies. Among the most popular are the illustrated weeklies, which include the satirical Ludas Matyi (527,000), the women's magazine Nők Lapja (1,000,000), the illustrated news journal Képes Újság (545,000) and the political paper Szabad Föld (460,000). A news magazine giving a high standard of reporting and political discussion is Magyarország. Specialized periodicals include 20 cultural publications, 24 medical journals, 26 scientific papers, 14 agricultural and 13 religious publications. Of this last category Új Ember Evangelikus Élet and Új Élet for Catholic, Lutheran and Jewish congregations respectively, are representative.

REACTORS AND ACCELERATORS

Research Reactor. An experimental reactor at Csillebérc, near Budapest, started in 1959. Supplied by the U.S.S.R., it is of the "VVR-S" type, fuelled by enriched uranium, and cooled and moderated by ordinary water. It is used for research in nuclear physics and biology, and the production of radio isotopes.

Training Reactor. In 1970 Hungarian universities inaugurated a low-power reactor of Hungarian design at the Technical University of Budapest for university and postgraduate training and research.

Accelerators. A 5 MeV electrostatic accelerator, a 200 kev and 180 kev cascade accelerator, in Budapest, and a 2.2 MeV electrostatic accelerator, as well as a 800 kev, 300 kev and 100 kev accelerator, in Debrecen, are in operation.

Co-operation. Agreements have been signed for co-operation in the peaceful uses of atomic energy with Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, India, Italy, Romania and the U.S.S.R. Hungary is a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Vienna, the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research, Dubna, near Moscow and the CMEA Standing Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy.

ICELAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Iceland comprises one large island and numerous smaller ones, situated near the Arctic Circle in the North Atlantic Ocean. The main island lies about 300 km. south-east of Greenland, about 1,000 km. west of Norway and about 800 km. north of Scotland. The Gulf Stream keeps Iceland warmer than might be expected, with average temperatures ranging from 10°C (50°F) in summer to 1°C (34°F) in winter. Icelandic is the official language. The Evangelical Lutheran Church is the established church and embraces 93 per cent of the population. The national flag (proportions 25 by 18) has a red cross, bordered with white, on a blue field, the upright of the cross being to the left of centre. The capital is Reykjavík.

Recent History

Iceland became independent on June 17th, 1944, when the Convention linking it with Denmark under the Danish throne was terminated. Iceland is a founder member of the Nordic Council (1953) and has belonged to both NATO and the Council of Europe since 1949.

From 1959 to 1971 Iceland was governed by a coalition of the Independence and Social Democratic Parties. In the general election of June 1971 there was a swing to the left, and Ólafur Jóhannesson, the leader of the Progressive Party, formed a coalition government with the People's Alliance and the Union of Liberals and Leftists. Elections held in June 1974 showed a swing back to the right, and in August the Independence and Progressive Parties formed a coalition led by Geir Hallgrímsson. Loss of popularity through its treatment of Iceland's economic problems, such as the perpetuation of rampant inflation by index-linked wage settlements, led to its resignation in June 1978 following extensive election gains by the left-wing People's Alliance and Social Democratic Party. Disagreements over economic measures and over the People's Alliance's policy of withdrawal from NATO, led to two months of negotiations before a new government was formed. In September 1978 Jóhannesson, the former Prime Minister, formed a coalition of his own Progressive Party with the People's Alliance and the Social Democrats, but this government, after dealing with immediate economic necessities, resigned in October 1979 when the Social Democrats withdrew. A caretaker administration was formed by Benedikt Gröndal, the Social Democratic leader. General elections held in December were inconclusive, and in February 1980 Gunnar Thoroddsen of the Independence Party formed a coalition with the People's Alliance and Progressive Party. Vigdís Finnbogadóttir, a non-political candidate favoured by left-wing groups because of her opposition to the U.S. military airbase in Iceland, achieved a narrow victory in elections held in June 1980 for the mainly ceremonial office of President, becoming the world's first popularly-elected female Head of State.

The importance of the fisheries to Iceland's economy, and fears of excessive exploitation by foreign fishing fleets, caused the Icelandic Government to extend its territorial waters to 12 nautical miles (22 km.) in 1964 and to 50 nautical miles (93 km.) in September 1972. British opposition to these extensions produced two "Cod Wars". In October 1975 Iceland unilaterally introduced a fishing limit of 200 nautical miles (370 km.) both as a conservation measure and to protect important Icelandic interests. The 1973 agreement on fishing limits between Iceland and the United Kingdom expired in November 1975 and failure to reach a new agreement led to the third and most serious "Cod War". Casualties occurred, and in February 1976 Iceland temporarily broke off diplomatic relations with Britain, the first ever diplomatic break between two NATO countries. In June 1976 the two countries signed a six-month agreement allowing 24 British trawlers per day to fish within Iceland's 200-mile limit. When the agreement ended in December 1976, the British trawler fleet was forced to leave Icelandic waters. In June 1979 Iceland declared its exclusive rights to the 200-mile fishing zone.

Government

According to the Constitution, executive power is vested in the President (elected for four years by universal adult suffrage) and the Cabinet, consisting of the Prime Minister and other Ministers appointed by the President. In practice, however, the President performs only nominally the functions ascribed in the Constitution to this office, and it is the Cabinet alone which holds real executive power. Legislative power is held jointly by the President and the Althing (Parliament), with 60 members elected by universal suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution by the President), using a mixed system of proportional representation. The Althing chooses 20 of its members to form the Upper House, the other 40 forming the Lower House. For some purposes the two Houses sit jointly as the United Althing. The Cabinet is responsible to the Althing. Iceland has seven administrative districts.

Defence

Iceland has no defence forces of its own but is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). There are units of United States Forces at Keflavík air base, which is used for observation of the North Atlantic, under an agreement of 1951 between Iceland and NATO. The airfield at Keflavík is a base for the new American airborne early warning system. An agreement between Iceland and the U.S.A. in October 1974 limited U.S. troops in Iceland to 2,900.

Economic Affairs

The Icelandic economy is excessively dependent on fishing, which provided 74.9 per cent of total visible export receipts in 1980. Iceland is, therefore, very susceptible to movements in world prices of fish products and the size of its catches. The modernized trawler fleet supplies about 80 freezing plants, which produce white fish fillets, frozen shrimp, scallops, scampi and capelin. Other fish products, such as oil, meal and salted fish, are major exports. Recently the need to conserve fish stocks has obliged the Icelandic fleet to work below its maximum capacity.

Very little land is arable, but good grazing keeps Iceland self-sufficient in meat and milk products. Production costs are high and exports have to be subsidized. In recent years the wool industry has developed rapidly.

Iceland's only significant natural resource, apart from fish, is its potential for cheap hydroelectric and geothermal power production. Geothermal energy is used for home heating and in diatomite production, and may be more fully exploited as a substitute for increasingly expensive imported oil. Cheap hydroelectricity is used by the aluminium plant owned by the Swiss Alusuisse group. At this plant imported ore is processed, producing ingots and rolling slabs for export. Aluminium exports contributed 12.1 per cent of total visible export receipts in 1980. Other foreign companies have shown an interest in the establishing of plants in Iceland for energy-intensive processes. Norway owns a 45 per cent share in Iceland's first ferro-silicon plant in Whale Bay, which is expected to produce 50,000 tons annually in the near future.

In 1980 the principal sources of imports to Iceland were the Federal Republic of Germany, the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, the U.S.A. and the Netherlands; its main export markets were the U.S.A., the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany. Iceland joined EFTA in 1970, and in 1972 negotiated a trade agreement with the EEC. Tariffs on Icelandic fish exports to the EEC were reduced after the settlement of the fisheries dispute with Britain. The final abolition of tariffs between Iceland and the EEC and EFTA took place on January 1st, 1980.

The Icelandic economy in recent years has experienced the difficulties arising from a severe inflation. Large pay rises, accompanied by the index-linking of wages to the price level, have ensured that inflation has remained high. Though inflation in the year to August 1977 was the lowest since 1973, at 26.7 per cent, it rose to an average rate of 44 per cent in the next 12 months, despite the Government's attempts to restrain the rise of indexed wages in February 1978. The left-wing coalition restored full indexation of wages in September 1978, but proposed to combat inflation by reviewing the system of index-linking. The Government also expressed its determination to balance the budget and avoid further borrowing abroad, but these goals have not as yet been fully achieved. In 1980 the inflation rate reached 58 per cent, although easing to an average rate of 50 per cent by mid-1981. Price rises have forced repeated devaluations of the currency to maintain competitive pricing of fish exports; after depreciating by 57 per cent between 1973 and 1977, the króna was further devalued by 13 per cent in February 1978, by 15 per cent in September and by 4.76 per cent in August 1981. In January 1981 a "new" króna was introduced, equivalent to 100 "old" krónur.

Despite the problems produced by persistent inflation, the Icelandic economy has remained vigorous. The average annual rate of growth in G.N.P. from 1970 to 1979 was 5.1 per cent. Investment has remained high, and employment of capital and labour in 1979 was nearly full. With the high price of fish on world markets, and export revenue from the aluminium plant, the trade deficit was relatively small in 1977 and moved into surplus in 1978 and 1979, although returning to modest deficit in 1980 following problems with Alusuisse over prices paid for alumina imports.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways. Much of the interior is uninhabited and the main roads follow the coast line. Regular motor coach services link the main settlements. Heavy freight is carried by coastal shipping. Development plans provide for new roads and harbour installations. Air transport is particularly important to Iceland and is used, for example, to transport agricultural produce from remote districts. There are regular air services between Reykjavík and outlying townships.

Social Welfare

There is a comprehensive system of social security providing a wide range of insurance benefits including old-age pensions, family allowances, maternity grants, widows' pensions, etc. Contributions to the scheme are compulsory. Pension and health insurance now apply to the whole population. Accident insurance applies to all wage and salary earners and self-employed persons—unless they request exemption—and unemployment insurance to the unions of skilled and unskilled workers and seamen in all towns and villages of over 300 inhabitants, as well as to several unions in villages of less than 300 inhabitants.

Education

Education is compulsory and free for all children between the ages of 7 and 15 years. Primary education is available in day schools in urban regions, while in the more remote country districts pupils attend a state boarding-school. Ordinary secondary education is then available, lasting three to four years. In 1974 the primary and lower secondary schools were formed into basic schools, leading to a basic school national examination, which gives access to further education. The matriculation examination at the end of four years at upper secondary school or a comprehensive school provides the qualification for University entrance. Iceland has three institutions of higher learning.

Tourism

Iceland's main attraction for tourists lies in the ruggedness of the interior with its geysers and thermal springs. Following a period of rapid growth between 1968 and 1971, when the number of foreign visitors to Iceland increased by 50 per cent, the rate of expansion slowed, and tourist arrivals fell from 77,000 in 1979 to 66,000 in 1980.

Public Holidays

1982: April 8th (Maundy Thursday), April 9th (Good Friday), April 12th (Easter Monday), April 22nd (1st day of Summer), May 1st (Labour Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), May 31st (Whit Monday), June 17th (National Day), August 2nd (Bank Holiday), December 24th, 25th and 26th (Christmas), December 31st (New Year's Eve).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

FINANCE

100 aurar (singular: eyrir) = 1 new Icelandic króna.

Coins: 5, 10 and 50 aurar; 1 and 5 krónur.

Notes: 10, 50, 100 and 500 krónur.

100 new krónur = £7.46 = $13.94.

Note: From August 1961 to November 1967 the exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 43 krónur. Between November 1967 and November 1968 the rate was $1 = 57 krónur. From November 1968 to December 1972 the official rate was $1 = 88 krónur, though from August 1971 the market rate was around 87.5 krónur per $. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate between November 1968 and August 1971 was £1 = 211.20 krónur. Since June 1973 the króna has been allowed to "float", though the Icelandic authorities have sometimes intervened to adjust the market rate of exchange. The average market rate (old krónur per U.S. dollar) was: 90.13 in 1973; 99.95 in 1974; 153.70 in 1975; 182.17 in 1976; 198.87 in 1977; 271.11 in 1978; 352.60 in 1979; 479.76 in 1980. A new króna, equivalent to 100 krónur, was introduced on January 1st, 1981.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Summary of main provisions; in operation from June 17th, 1944)

THE GOVERNMENT

The President is elected for four years by universal suffrage. All those qualified to vote who have reached the age of 35 are eligible for the Presidency.

The Legislative power is jointly vested in the Althing and the President. The Executive power is exercised by the President and other governmental authorities in accordance with the constitution and other laws of the land.

The President summons the Althing every year and determines when the session shall close. He may adjourn meetings of the Althing but not for more than two weeks nor more than once a year. He appoints the Ministers and presides over the State Council. He may be dismissed only if a resolution supported by three-quarters of the Althing is approved by a plebiscite.

The President may dissolve the Althing. Elections must be held within two months and the Althing must reassemble within eight months.

The Althing is composed of 60 members, 49 of whom are elected by 8 proportionately represented constituencies for a period of four years, while 11 supplementary seats are allotted to the parties for equalization, intended to achieve as near a really proportional representation with regard to the total of votes gained by each party as possible, without raising the total number of members above 60. Substitute members are elected at the same time and in the same manner as Althing members. The Althing is divided into two houses, the efri deild, or Upper House, and the nedri deild, or Lower House; but sometimes both Houses work together as a United Althing. The Upper House consists of a third of the members whom the United Althing chooses from amongst the representatives, the remaining two-thirds forming the Lower House. Each House and the United Althing elects its own Speaker. The voting age, both for local administrative bodies and for the Althing, is twenty and all citizens domiciled in Iceland may vote, provided they are of unblemished character and financially responsible.

The budget must be introduced in the United Althing but other bills may be introduced into either House. They must, however, be given three readings in each house and be approved by a simple majority before they are submitted to the President. If he disapproves a bill it nevertheless becomes valid but must be submitted to a plebiscite. Ministers may speak in either House, but may vote only in that of which they are members. The Ministers are responsible to the Althing and may be impeached by that body, in which case they are tried by the Court of Impeachment.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

For purposes of Local Government the country is divided into Provinces, Districts and Municipalities. The 8 Urban Municipalities are governed by Town Councils, which possess considerable autonomy. The Districts also have Councils and are further grouped together to form the Provinces, over each of which a centrally appointed Chief Official presides. The franchise for municipal purposes is universal above 20 years, conducted on a basis of proportional representation.

IRELAND

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Ireland comprises 26 of the 32 counties making up the island of Ireland. The remaining six counties in the north-east come under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United Kingdom. Ireland lies in the Atlantic, about 50 miles (80 km.) west of Great Britain. The climate is mild and equable. Irish is the official first language, but its use as a vernacular is now restricted to certain areas, collectively known as the Gaeltacht. English is universally spoken. Official documents are printed in English and Irish. About 95 per cent of the population are Roman Catholic and 5 per cent Protestant. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) consists of three vertical bands of green, white and orange. The capital is Dublin.

Recent History

The whole of Ireland was formerly part of the United Kingdom. In 1920 the island was partitioned, the six north-eastern counties remaining part of the U.K., with their own government. In 1922 the 26 southern counties achieved dominion status, as the Irish Free State, the dissolution of the remaining links with Great Britain culminating in the adoption by plebiscite of the 1937 Constitution and the establishment of the Republic on April 18th, 1949. The partition of Ireland has remained a contentious issue and the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army (IRA) has mounted a violent campaign to achieve reunification.

In the general election of February 1973, Fianna Fáil, Ireland's traditional ruling party with 44 years in office to its credit, was defeated: Jack Lynch, Prime Minister since 1966, resigned and Liam Cosgrave (Fine Gael) formed a coalition of the Labour and Fine Gael parties. The Cosgrave Government, in an attempt to find reconciliation with Northern Ireland (see Northern Ireland in United Kingdom chapter), considered constitutional changes which would involve the Republic's renunciation of territorial claims on Ulster. The Government remained committed to power-sharing but resisted any British military withdrawal from the North.

Following the assassination of the British Ambassador by the Provisional IRA in July 1976, the Government introduced stronger measures against terrorism (repealed in October 1977). Following criticism by the Defence Minister, the President, Carroll O'Daly, resigned in October 1976. Dr. Patrick Hillery, nominee of the opposition Fianna Fáil, was the only candidate for the presidency and took office in December. Fianna Fáil won a convincing victory in the general election of June 1977 and Jack Lynch became Prime Minister, maintaining the improved relations with the British Government which had been achieved by the Cosgrave administration; he aimed at power-sharing devolved government in the North, rather than a totally united Ireland, a policy which aroused much criticism from within Fianna Fáil. After the murder of Earl Mountbatten by the IRA in August 1979 and the massacre of 18 British soldiers at Warrenpoint, Mr. Lynch held talks with the British Government and agreed to increase border security. In December Mr. Lynch resigned as Prime Minister and was succeeded by Charles Haughey, formerly Minister for Health, who pursued a policy of a united Ireland with a measure of autonomy for the North, provided that a power-sharing Executive be maintained. He met the British Prime Minister in May 1980, when it was decided to hold regular Anglo-Irish discussions on the issue.

Mr. Haughey called an early election in June 1981 in the hope of consolidating his position before introducing measures to deal with the worsening economic situation. As a result, a coalition between Fine Gael and the Labour Party was formed with a precarious parliamentary majority, and Dr. Garret FitzGerald (Fine Gael) formed a new government. The hunger strike in Northern Ireland had considerable repercussions in the Republic: two republican prisoners in Northern Ireland were elected to the Dáil in June, and the Irish Government criticized the British attitude to the hunger strike, although the Anglo-Irish summit meetings continued and an Intergovernmental Council was set up in November. In September Dr. FitzGerald proposed a referendum on constitutional changes, including the removal of claims to territorial jurisdiction over Northern Ireland and the lifting of the ban on divorce, in order to make unity more acceptable to Ulster Protestants.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the bicameral National Parliament, comprising a Senate (with restricted powers) and a House of Representatives. The Senate (Seanad Éireann) has 60 members, including 11 nominated by the Prime Minister and 49 indirectly elected for five years. The House (Dáil Éireann) has 166 members elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution), using proportional representation.

The President is a constitutional Head of State elected by direct popular vote for seven years. Executive power is effectively held by the Cabinet, led by the Taoiseach (Prime Minister), who is appointed by the President on the nomination of the Dáil. The President appoints other Ministers on the nomination of the Prime Minister with the previous approval of the Dáil. The Cabinet is responsible to the Dáil.

Defence

The regular armed forces totalled 14,012 in July 1981, of which the army comprised 12,428, the navy 890 and the air force 694. There was also a regular reserve of 538 and a territorial army reserve of 21,560. The defence budget for 1980 was £144 million. Military service is voluntary.

Economic Affairs

The economy is still largely based on agriculture, which accounted in 1980 for 19 per cent of employment and 36 per cent of total exports. Ireland's accession to the EEC in 1973 has provided a larger market for agricultural exports (farmers' incomes rose by 142 per cent during the first five years of EEC membership), and in 1978 the EEC's share of Irish exports was 30.3 per cent. The value of beef exports increased by 35 per cent to £815 million in 1980, a record figure due in part to the selling-off of stock by hard-pressed farmers. Farmers' real incomes dropped by over 40 per cent between 1978 and 1980.

Tourism continues to be a major industry, although the number of visitors dropped slightly in 1980 and real revenue was down by 3 per cent to £279 million.

Major industrial expansion has taken place since 1960, and is promoted by the Industrial Development Authority, (IDA), which created 17,000 jobs in 1980 and approved investment projects aiming to create a further 35,000 in 1981-85, over half of which are with foreign firms, attracted by tax relief on exports. Computer and electronics companies are important targets of IDA efforts. The principal industrial groups are food and drink, metals and engineering, chemicals, textiles and tobacco. Industrial products comprised 53 per cent of exports in 1980.

The main exports are beef, chemicals, machinery, dairy products, textiles and live cattle. The United Kingdom is the principal foreign trade partner, accounting for nearly 51 per cent of imports and 43 per cent of exports in 1980. In recent years, however, Ireland has diversified its external trade and, since its accession to the EEC, has forged stronger trade links with other European countries, particularly with France and the Federal Republic of Germany. About 80 per cent of Ireland's energy requirements is imported, accounting for 15 per cent of total imports in 1980. Ireland is currently investigating offshore petroleum and natural gas resources. Production from the Kinsale Head natural gas field started in 1978; the gas is expected to provide 15 per cent of Ireland's energy requirement. Peat provides a fifth of the country's electricity supply, and the exploitation of low-grade coal deposits was also being investigated in 1981. Europe's largest lead-zinc mines opened at Navan in 1977, and an alumina plant to process imported bauxite is under construction in County Limerick, financed by Canadian, Dutch and American companies; in September 1979 the first drilling for uranium took place in County Donegal.

The rate of real growth in G.N.P. increased by 6 per cent in 1978, but fell to 2 per cent in 1979 and to 1 per cent in 1980. In spite of the creation of jobs by the IDA, unemployment rose to 13 per cent in mid-1981, and wage rises averaging 13 per cent in 1980 contributed to inflation running at 18 per cent. Heavy government investment led to a borrowing requirement amounting to 14.3 per cent of total G.N.P. in 1980. The supplementary budget approved in July 1981 aimed to reduce government borrowing by increasing indirect taxation, freezing public sector wages and cutting public expenditure.

In 1979 Ireland joined the European Monetary System, breaking its alignment with sterling. The punt subsequently remained stable in comparison with the pound sterling, and the break amounted to a devaluation against the pound beneficial to exporters.

Transport and Communications

There were 1,795 miles of railways operated by the State-owned Irish Transport Company (CIE) in 1980. In 1977 the extent of the roads system was 57,684 miles, 9,988 miles of which were main roads. Chief sea ports are Dublin and Dún Laoghaire, Cork, Waterford, Rosslare, Limerick, Foynes, Galway, New Ross, Drogheda, Dundalk, Fenit and Whiddy Island. There are international airports at Shannon, Dublin and Cork, of which Shannon is used for transatlantic flights. The national airline is Aer Lingus.

Social Welfare

Social welfare benefits in Ireland fall into two general categories: (1) those received under compulsory insurance schemes by contributors and their dependants; and (2) those received on a non-contributory basis by people of inadequate means. Children's allowances are also paid to all households for each child without regard to family means.

Social Welfare Insurance is now compulsory for both manual and non-manual workers. The social insurance scheme provides for widows', retirement and old age pensions, unemployment, disability and invalidity benefits and death grants. The cost is shared by the employer, the employee and the State. An occupational injuries benefit scheme is also in operation.

People of inadequate means who are not entitled to benefit under these contributory schemes may receive non-contributory pensions or other benefits from the State or other public funds. These benefits include widows' pensions, deserted wives' allowances, old age and blindness pensions, supplementary welfare allowance and unemployment assistance. Expenditure on social insurance and assistance for 1979 was estimated at £848 million.

The following health services are available without charge to the whole community: immunization and treatment for infectious diseases; diagnostic services; hospital services for all children suffering from specified long-term diseases; free drugs for adults suffering from specified diseases; and assistance towards the cost of prescribed drugs, in accordance with the drug refund scheme.

All health services are available without charge to the lower income group, about 38 per cent of the population. The middle income group, about 45 per cent of the population, is entitled to free hospital services (in-patient and out-patient), free maternity and infant welfare services, and subsidized accommodation as a private patient. Those in the higher income group are eligible for free hospital services, but are liable for consultants' fees; they also qualify for subsidized accommodation as a private patient. Health accounted for 17 per cent of budget expenditure in 1980. In addition, there are various community welfare services for the chronically sick, the elderly, and families under stress.

Education

Education in Ireland is compulsory from the age of 6 to 15. Most children attend a National School until the age of 12, when they transfer to a post-primary school.

Post-primary education takes place in four sorts of school. Secondary Schools are private institutions run by boards of governors or religious communities but are subsidized by the Department of Education. Pupils take the Intermediate Certificate at 15 or 16 years of age, and may proceed to a 2-year course leading to the Leaving Certificate at 17 or 18.

Vocational Schools provide primary school leavers with a general course similar to that for pupils in secondary schools, but with a greater emphasis on non-academic subjects. In each county these schools come under the management of a Vocational Education Committee elected by the local authority.

Comprehensive Schools are State-financed and offer a balanced academic and technical curriculum with educational options structured to the needs, abilities and interests of the pupils; the courses lead to the Intermediate and Leaving Certificate examinations. Community Schools are a more recent innovation. They are State financed, offer curricula similar to the comprehensive schools and were intended to replace existing vocational and secondary schools in rural areas but are also being established in new city areas.

Nine regional technical colleges provide senior, post-primary apprenticeship, technical, professional and other courses.

The gaining of certain prescribed successes in the Leaving Certificate examination qualifies for entrance to the two universities, which are both self-governing, though they receive annual state grants. The National Institute for Higher Education, at Limerick, runs degree courses of a largely technological nature, although the humanities are represented. A National Institute for Higher Education opened in Dublin in September 1980. The Department of Education provides university and other higher education grants to students.

Introductory Survey, Statistical Survey

In the 1980 budget £536 million (about 15 per cent of the total) was allocated to education.

Tourism

Intensive marketing campaigns have been undertaken in recent years to develop new markets for Irish tourism. The country has numerous beauty spots, notably the Killarney Lakes and the West Coast. The tourism industry earned £279 million in 1980, with 2,258,000 visitors.

Public Holidays

1982: March 17th (St. Patrick's Day), April 9th (Good Friday), April 12th (Easter Monday), June 7th (June Bank Holiday), August 2nd (August Bank Holiday), October 25th (October Bank Holiday), December 25th, 27th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year).

Weights and Measures

The imperial system of weights and measures is in force, but metrication is being introduced gradually.

THE CONSTITUTION

The original Constitution of the Irish Free State came into operation on December 6th, 1922. Certain provisions which were regarded as contrary to national sentiments were gradually removed by successive amendments, with the result that by 1937 the text differed considerably from that of the original document. It was superseded by an entirely new Constitution, which was approved by Parliament on June 14th, 1937, and enacted by the people by means of a plebiscite on July 1st. This new Constitution came into operation on December 29th, 1937. Ireland became a republic on April 18th, 1949. The following is a summary of the Constitution's main provisions:

TITLE OF THE STATE

The title of the State is Éire or, in the English language, Ireland.

NATIONAL STATUS

The Constitution declares that Ireland is a sovereign, independent, democratic State. It affirms the inalienable, indefeasible and sovereign right of the Irish nation to choose its own form of government, to determine its relations with other nations, and to develop its life, political, economic and cultural, in accordance with its own genius and traditions.

The Constitution applies to the whole of Ireland, but, pending the re-integration of the national territory, the laws enacted by the Parliament established by the Constitution have the same area and extent of application as those of the Irish Free State.

THE PRESIDENT

At the head of the State is the President, elected by direct suffrage, who holds office for a period of seven years. He, on the advice of the Government or its head, summons and dissolves Parliament, signs and promulgates laws and appoints judges; on the nomination of the Dáil he appoints the Prime Minister and, on the nomination of the Prime Minister with the previous approval of the Dáil, he appoints the other members of the Government. The supreme command of the Defence Forces is vested in him, its exercise being regulated by law.

In addition, the President has power to refer certain Bills to the Supreme Court for decision on the question of their constitutionality; and also, at the instance of a prescribed proportion of the members of both Houses of Parliament to refer certain Bills to the people for decision at a referendum.

The President, in the exercise and performance of certain of his Constitutional powers and functions, has the aid and advice of a Council of State.

PARLIAMENT

The Oireachtas, or National Parliament, consists of the President and two Houses, viz. a House of Representatives, called Dáil Éireann, and a Senate, called Seanad Éireann. The Dáil consists of 166 members, who are elected for a five-year term by adult suffrage on the system of proportional representation by means of the single, transferable vote. Of the sixty members of the Senate, eleven are nominated by the Prime Minister, six are elected by the universities, and forty-three are elected from five panels of candidates established on a vocational basis, representing: (1) National Language and Culture, Literature, Art, Education, and such professional interests as may be defined by law for the purpose of this panel; (2) Agriculture and allied interests, and Fisheries; (3) Labour, whether organized or unorganized; (4) Industry and Commerce, including banking, finance, accountancy, engineering and architecture; (5) Public Administration and social services, including voluntary social activities.

A maximum period of ninety days is afforded to the Senate for the consideration or amendment of Bills sent to that House by the Dáil, but the Senate has no power to veto legislation.

EXECUTIVE

The Executive Power of the State is exercised by the Government, which is responsible to the Dáil and consists of not fewer than seven and not more than fifteen members. The head of the Government is the Prime Minister.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The State recognizes the family as the natural, primary and fundamental unit group of Society, possessing inalienable and imprescriptible rights antecedent and superior to all positive law. It acknowledges the right and duty of parents to provide for the education of their children, and, with due regard to that right, undertakes to provide free education. It pledges itself also to guard with special care the institution of marriage.

The Constitution contains special provision for the recognition and protection of the fundamental rights of citizens, such as personal liberty, free expression of opinion, peaceable assembly, and the formation of associations and unions.

Freedom of conscience and the free practice and profession of religion are, subject to public order and morality, guaranteed to every citizen. No religion may be endowed or subjected to discriminatory disability. Since December, 1972, when a referendum was taken on the issue, the Catholic Church is no longer granted a special, privileged position.

SOCIAL POLICY

Certain principles of social policy intended for the general guidance of Parliament, but not cognizable by the courts, are set forth in the Constitution. Among their objects are the direction of the policy of the State towards securing the distribution of property so as to subserve the common good, the regulation of credit so as to serve the welfare of the people as a whole, the establishment of families in economic security on the land, and the right to an adequate means of livelihood for all citizens.

The State pledges itself to safeguard the interests, and to contribute where necessary to the support, of the infirm, the widow, the orphan and the aged, and shall endeavour to ensure that citizens shall not be forced by economic necessity to enter occupations unsuited to their sex, age or strength.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION

No amendment to the Constitution can be effected except by the decision of the people given at a referendum.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Justice is administered in public by Judges appointed by the President on the advice of the Government. The Judges of all Courts are completely independent in the exercise of their judicial functions. The jurisdiction and organization of the Courts are dealt with in the Courts (Establishment and Constitution) Act, 1961, and the Courts (Supplemental Provisions) Acts, 1961 to 1981.

THE SUPREME COURT

The Supreme Court, consisting of the Chief Justice and five other Judges, has appellate jurisdiction from all decisions of the High Court. The President of Ireland may, after consultation with the Council of State, refer a Bill which has been passed by both Houses of the Oireachtas (other than a Money Bill or certain others), to the Supreme Court to establish whether it or any provisions thereof are repugnant to the Constitution.

THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL

The Court of Criminal Appeal, consisting of the Chief Justice or an ordinary Judge of the Supreme Court and two Judges of the High Court, deals with appeals by persons convicted on indictment, where leave to appeal has been granted. The decision of this Court is final unless the Court or the Attorney-General or the Director of Public Prosecutions certifies that a point of law involved should, in the public interest, be taken to the Supreme Court.

THE HIGH COURT

The High Court, consisting of the President of the High Court and twelve ordinary Judges, has full original jurisdiction in, and power to determine, all matters and questions whether of law or fact, civil or criminal. The High Court on circuit acts as an appeal court from the Circuit Court. The Central Criminal Court sits as directed by the President of the High Court to try criminal cases outside the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. The duty of acting as the Central Criminal Court is assigned, for the time being, to a Judge of the High Court.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS

The civil jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is limited to £2,000 in contract and tort and in actions founded on hire-purchase and credit-sale agreements and to £5,000 in equity, and in probate and administration, but where the parties consent the jurisdiction is unlimited. In criminal matters the Court has jurisdiction in all cases except murder, treason, piracy and allied offences. One Circuit Judge is permanently assigned to each circuit outside Dublin and five to the Dublin circuit. In addition there is one permanently unassigned Judge. The Circuit Court acts as an appeal court from the District Court, which has a summary jurisdiction in a large number of criminal cases where the offence is not of a serious nature. In civil matters the District Court has jurisdiction in contract and tort (except slander, libel, seduction, slander of title, malicious prosecution and false imprisonment) where the claim does not exceed £250 and in actions founded on hire-purchase and credit-sale agreements.

All criminal cases except those dealt with summarily by a Justice in the District Court are tried by a Judge and a Jury of twelve. Juries are also used in very many civil cases in the High Court. In a criminal case the jury must be unanimous in reaching a verdict but in a civil case the agreement of nine members is sufficient.

JUDGES OF THE SUPREME COURT

Hon. Mr. Justice THOMAS F. O'HIGGINS, Chief Justice.
Hon. Mr. Justice BRIAN WALSH.
Hon. Mr. Justice SEAMUS HENCHY.
Hon. Mr. Justice FRANCIS GRIFFIN.
Hon. Mr. Justice JOHN KENNY.
Hon. Mr. Justice ANTHONY HERDMAN.

JUDGES OF THE HIGH COURT

Hon. RORY O'HANLON.

RELIGION

The organization of the churches takes no account of the partition of Ireland into two separate political entities. Thus the Catholic Primate of All Ireland and the Protestant Episcopal Primate of All Ireland now have their seat in Northern Ireland at Armagh, and the headquarters of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland is at Belfast.

People professing religious beliefs in the Republic were divided as follows, according to the 1961 census:

Catholic	2,673,473
Church of Ireland	104,016
Presbyterian	18,953
Methodist	6,676
Other	15,223
TOTAL	2,818,341

JEWISH COMMUNITY

Chief Rabbi: The Very Rev. DAVID ROSEN.

THE PRESS

The Constitution of Ireland provides for the recognition and protection of the fundamental rights of the citizen, including free expression of opinion. Despite the powerful position of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland there is open discussion on controversial issues. The right of a journalist's professional secrecy is not recognized by the Irish Courts.

Ireland has seven daily newspapers, five in Dublin and two in Cork, including four morning papers which are distributed nationally. There are three national Sunday papers.

ITALY

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Italian Republic comprises a peninsula, extending from southern Europe into the Mediterranean Sea, and a number of adjacent islands. The two principal islands are Sicily to the south-west and Sardinia to the west. The Alps form a natural boundary to the north where the bordering countries are France to the north-west, Switzerland and Austria to the north and Yugoslavia to the north-east. The climate is Mediterranean. The principal language is Italian. German is spoken in the Alto Adige region on the Austrian border, and in the Basilicata region of eastern Italy there is an Albanian-speaking minority. Roman Catholicism is the state religion. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal vertical bands of green, white and red. The capital is Rome.

Recent History

In June 1946, as a result of a plebiscite, the monarchy was abolished and Italy became a Republic. Between 1946 and 1980 there were 40 governments. Until 1963 the Christian Democrats' monopoly of power was unchallenged; industry expanded rapidly in a liberal economic system supported by capital from the United States. However, by 1963 low wage rates and lack of social reforms had increased discontent and in the elections of that year the Communist Party, together with other parties of the extreme right and left, made considerable gains at the expense of the Christian Democrats. The result of these losses was a rapid succession of mainly coalition governments involving the Christian Democrats and one or more of the other major parties. The failure of successive governments to cope with the decline of the economy and public services, corruption in high places and the growth of lawlessness provoked discontent with the political parties which had held power for so long. In the regional elections of June 1975 the Communists attracted 33 per cent of the votes, and although the Christian Democrats still led the poll with 35 per cent, their complete domination of political life was clearly at an end. The Communists, rather than accepting the possibility of a left-wing coalition government, continued to press for the "historic compromise", a programme for Italy's future based on an alliance between Communism and Catholicism.

Aldo Moro's coalition government of Christian Democrats and Republicans, formed in November 1974, resigned in January 1976 after the withdrawal of support by the Socialists. Moro formed a minority Christian Democrat administration in February, but was forced to hold an election in June. The Communists greatly increased their share of the vote, receiving over 34 per cent as against 27 per cent in 1972. More surprisingly, the Christian Democrats maintained their 38 per cent share by taking votes from the extreme right and the smaller centre parties. Although the Christian Democrats still rejected the "historic compromise" and insisted on excluding the Communists from power, they could no longer govern against their opposition in parliament. At the end of July, Giulio Andreotti formed a government of Christian Democrats assured of the abstention of the Communist deputies, and proceeded to introduce severe austerity measures to cope with the continuing economic crisis. In July 1977 the Communists, after four months of negotiations, were allowed a voice in policy-making but no direct role in the government. However, one result of the Communist support for the Christian Democrats was the alienation of the extreme left, some of whom resorted to the type of political violence hitherto associated with extreme right-wing groups.

The minority government was forced to resign in January 1978, owing to pressure from the Communists, who wanted a more active participation in government, including ministerial portfolios. In March Andreotti formed another administration, relying on positive Communist support for the Christian Democrats. The new Cabinet was virtually the same as the previous one, the Communists having abandoned their claim to ministerial positions.

The first crisis faced by the new Government was the kidnapping of the former Prime Minister, Aldo Moro, in March. His body was recovered shortly after his murder nearly two months later. The Government resolutely refused to bargain with the terrorists while introducing more stringent penalties and increasing police powers to deal with this type of crime. The Government was forced to face yet another political crisis when the President, Giovanni Leone, resigned in June as a result of allegations of corruption. A series of inconclusive ballots finally ended with the election in July of Alessandro Pertini as the first Socialist President of the Republic.

The Andreotti administration collapsed in January 1979, when the Communists withdrew from the official parliamentary majority, subsequently renewing their claim to Cabinet posts. After protracted negotiations, a new coalition government of Christian Democrats, Republicans and Social Democrats was formed by Andreotti in March, only to be defeated on a vote of confidence in the Senate 10 days after it had been sworn in. Elections to both Houses of Parliament in June did not relieve the stalemate. The Christian Democrats' share of the vote for the Chamber of Deputies declined marginally to 38.3 per cent, while the Communists' share dropped more significantly to 30.4 per cent. This unprecedented loss of support prompted the Communists to return to the role of opposition in the next Parliament.

In August 1979 Francesco Cossiga formed a minority "government of truce" composed of Christian Democrats, Liberals and Social Democrats, and relying on the abstention of the Socialists. In spite of its mandate, the new government's initiatives were repeatedly thwarted by obstructionism in Parliament. The coalition was defeated when first the Socialists and then the Republicans withdrew their tacit support. Cossiga's second administration, formed in April 1980, admitted the Socialists to the Government for the first time in six years in a majority coalition with the Christian Democrats and the Republicans. The deliberate exclusion of the Communists led to an open campaign on their part in Parliament to bring down the new Government. In September it was forced out of office in a secret ballot on its economic programme. Arnaldo Forlani, the chairman of the Christian Democrat party, assembled a coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Republicans and Social Democrats in October 1980. The new administration's integrity was damaged by a series of events: an oil company tax evasion scandal in October, an earthquake in the south in November and ensuing allegations of government mismanagement of aid, the kidnapping of a judge by "Red Brigades" terrorists and the controversial closure of the maximum security wing at Asinara prison. The "P-2 affair", the worst scandal in Italian recent history, finally forced the Government to resign in May 1981: it had been made known that over 1,000 of Italy's foremost establishment figures belonged to a secret masonic lodge named P-2 (Propaganda Due), with extensive criminal connections, linking it to many recent scandals and even right-wing terrorism.

In late 1980 Enrico Berlinguer, the Communist leader, rejecting the "historic compromise", called for a government of the left excluding the Christian Democrats from power and in 1981 the Communists continued to advance the "left-wing alternative". Bettino Craxi, the Socialist leader, declared his claim to the role of Prime Minister in April 1981. However, it was Senator Giovanni Spadolini, leader of the small Republican party, who finally gained the necessary support to form in July 1981 a majority coalition of Socialists, Republicans, Christian Democrats, Social Democrats and Liberals, thus becoming the first non-Christian Democrat Prime Minister since the start of the Republic.

Government

Under the 1948 Constitution, legislative power is held by the bicameral Parliament, elected by universal suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution), using proportional representation. The Senate has 315 elected members (seats allocated on a regional basis) and seven life Senators. The Chamber of Deputies has 630 members. The minimum voting age is 25 years for the Senate and 18 years for the Chamber. The two houses have equal power.

The President of the Republic is a constitutional Head of State elected for seven years by an electoral college comprising both Houses of Parliament and 58 regional representatives. Executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers. The Head of State appoints the President of the Council (Prime Minister) and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Council is responsible to Parliament.

The country is divided into twenty regions, five of which (Sicily, Sardinia, Trentino-Alto Adige, Friuli-Venezia Giulia and Val d'Aosta) enjoy a special status. There is a large degree of regional autonomy. Each region has a regional council elected every five years by universal suffrage and a Giunta regionale responsible to the regional council. The regional council is a legislative assembly, while the Giunta holds executive power.

Defence

Italy has been a member of NATO since 1949. In July 1981 it maintained armed forces totalling 366,000 (including 239,300 conscripts): an army of 255,000, a navy of 42,000 and an air force of 69,000. Military service lasts 12 months in the army and air force and 18 months in the navy. The 1981 defence budget totalled 7,500,000 million lire.

Economic Affairs

Although agriculture continues to represent an important part of the Italian economy, a substantial advance has taken place since the end of the war in the proportion of the gross domestic product contributed by the industrial sector, particularly engineering and other manufacturing industries. By 1980 only 7 per cent of the G.D.P. was provided by agriculture, compared with 40 per cent by industry. State-owned industries account for approximately half the total national industrial investment. Successful plans have been enacted in recent years to modernize the agricultural sector but, although production doubled in the ten years to 1977, consumption trebled. The chief crops are rice, wheat, maize, grapes and olives. The earthquake in the south in November 1980 severely disrupted agricultural production. Tourism is also an important source of income; foreign visitors spent 6,815,000 million lire in Italy in 1979. Over five million Italians live abroad and their remittances form a valuable source of income.

Italy is heavily dependent on imported energy and, despite recently discovered petroleum reserves in the Adriatic and off Sicily, some 80 per cent of the country's energy requirements come from abroad. Production of gas provides about 50 per cent of the nation's requirements. However, increased amounts of methane will be available with the completion of a new pipeline, Transmed, from Algeria, still under construction in 1981. This joint project, costing £1,800 million, will supply 12,000 million cubic metres per year, thus becoming the largest foreign source of natural gas. With the prospect of a chronic national energy shortage towards the end of the 1980s, the Government has drawn up a 10-year energy plan concentrating on nuclear and coal-fired production.

Italy's long-term economic problem remains that of the integration of Southern Italy with the more industrially-developed North. The income per person of the Southern population is two-thirds that of the country as a whole, while employment and production lag far behind. The Cassa per il Mezzogiorno (1950-80) was set up to increase investment in the south, which has also benefited from the EEC Regional Fund. Since 1969 Italy has been faced with severe inflation and economic stagnation, problems exacerbated by the massive rise in petroleum prices.

In April 1977 Italy obtained a loan of U.S. $530 million from the IMF in return for pledges to reduce public spending and limit the annual inflation rate to 13 per cent by March 1978. By the end of September, foreign exchange reserves were at a record level and the balance of payments deficit and inflation continued to fall. During 1978, despite repeated political crises, the economy began to improve. The balance of payments showed a record surplus of 6,900,000 million lire, compared with 2,000,000 million in 1977. Foreign reserves also rose sharply and the rate of inflation in 1978 averaged 12.1 per cent. Italy maintained a strong external position during 1979, when the value of exports rose by 31 per cent, and the country became one of the largest foreign reserve holders in the West. However, the balance of payments surplus for 1979, already eroded by consecutive rises in petroleum prices, was approximately one third that of 1978. By November inflation had risen to 18.7 per cent and unemployment stood at 8.7 per cent. Industrial output for 1979 nonetheless increased by 6.5 per cent over 1978.

Recession in Europe and the rising cost of imported petroleum, coupled with an inflation rate of 21 per cent and undiminished internal demand, led to a trade deficit of 18,666,000 million lire in 1980. A drop in tourism receipts left an overall balance of payments deficit of 6,558,000 million lire for the year. Although gross national income grew by 3.5 per cent in 1980, by the second half of the year G.D.P. was in decline. The unemployment rate remained high in 1981 (at 8.8 per cent in September); the rate of inflation continued around 20 per cent and industrial production fell by 5.4 per cent between August 1980 and August 1981. While economic growth for the year was projected at less than 1 per cent, some expansion was expected in late 1981.

An economic package designed to cut consumption, and including several fiscal reforms, was introduced in November 1980. Severe credit limits were imposed, the banks' minimum interest rate was raised to 22.5 per cent and the lira was devalued by 6 per cent against EEC currencies in March 1981. Complementary measures to reduce the public sector borrowing requirement and assist industry were announced in April. An austerity budget for 1982 aimed to reduce public spending by cuts in health and social services and moderate tax increases, and to lower the inflation rate to 16 per cent.

The colossal deficit of the public sector, amounting to a projected 13 per cent of national income in 1980, represents a great burden on the Italian economy. On the other hand, the vigorous "submerged" economy, which operates outside government control, is thought to account for as much as 25 per cent of G.N.P.

Transport and Communications

There are 19,652 km. of railways, nearly half of them electrified. Rome's 15-km. underground railway system came into service in 1980. In 1980 there were 293,799 km. of road in Italy, including 44,552 km. of major roads and 101,680 km. of secondary roads. There were 5,901 km. of motorway in 1980. The 13-km. Mount Frejus highway tunnel, linking France and Italy through the Alps, opened to traffic in July 1980. In 1978 the merchant fleet had a displacement of 11.5 million gross tons and was the world's tenth largest.

Social Welfare

Italy has a comprehensive system of social benefits covering unemployment and disability as well as retirement pensions and family allowances. These benefits are all provided by the Istituto Nazionale della Previdenza Sociale (INPS).

An industrial injuries scheme is also operated by the Istituto Nazionale per l'Assicurazione contro gli Infortuni sul Lavoro (INAIL).

A comprehensive national health service, aiming to provide free medical care for all citizens, was introduced in 1980. However, minimum charges are still made for medical examinations and hospital treatment. All workers will be eligible for benefits under a unified national medical insurance scheme.

Education

Education is compulsory and free between the ages of 6 and 14 years. The curricula of all Italian schools are standardized by the Ministry of Education. After primary school, which is from 6 to 11 years, the pupil enters the lower secondary school (scuola media unificata). An examination at the end of three years leads to a lower secondary school certificate, which gives access to all higher secondary schools. Pupils wishing to enter a classical lycée (liceo classico) must also pass in Latin.

Higher secondary education is provided by Classical, Artistic and Scientific Lycées, Training Schools for Elementary Teachers and Technical and Vocational Institutes (industrial, commercial, nautical, etc.). After five years at a lycée the student sits an examination for the higher secondary school certificate (maturità), which allows automatic entry into any university faculty. Special four-year courses are provided at the Teachers' Training Schools and the diploma obtained permits entry to a special university faculty of education, the magistero, and a few other faculties. The istituti tecnici provide practical courses which prepare students for a specialized university faculty.

University courses last for a minimum of four years. Study allowances are awarded to students according to their means and merit.

Tourism

With Alpine and Mediterranean scenery, a sunny climate, Roman buildings, Renaissance towns and palaces, paintings and sculpture and famous opera houses, Italy attracts great numbers of tourists. During 1979 over 48 million foreign visitors went to Italy. There are about 4 million tourist beds.

Public Holidays

1982: April 12th (Easter Monday), April 25th (Liberation Day), May 1st (Labour Day), June 7th (National Day), August 15th (Assumption), November 1st (All Saints' Day), December 8th (The Immaculate Conception), December 25th (Christmas Day), December 26th (St. Stephen).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Currency and Exchange Rates

The Italian lira (nominally of 100 centesimi).

Exchange rates (October 1981):

U.S. $1 = 1,181.75 lire.

* Data refer to the trade of Italy (excluding the communes of Livigno and Campione) and San Marino, with which Italy maintains a custom union. The figures include trade in second-hand ships, and stores and bunkers for foreign ships and aircraft, but exclude manufactured gas, electric energy (before 1975), surplus military equipment, war reparations and repayments and gift parcels by post. Also excluded are imports of military goods and exports of fish landed abroad directly from Italian vessels. Figures from 1974 include gold ingots for non-monetary uses.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of the Italian Republic was approved by the Constituent Assembly on December 22nd, 1947, and came into force on January 1st, 1948. The fundamental principles are set out in Articles 1-12 as follows:

Italy is a democratic republic based on the labour of the people.

The Republic recognizes and guarantees as inviolable the rights of man, either as an individual or in a community, and it expects in return devotion to duty and the fulfilment of political, economic and social obligations.

All citizens shall enjoy equal status and shall be regarded as equal before the law, without distinction of sex, race, language or religion, and without regard to the political opinions which they may hold or their personal or social standing.

It shall be the function of the Republic to remove the economic and social inequalities which, by restricting the liberty of the individual, impede the full development of the human personality, thereby reducing the effective participation of the citizen in the political, economic and social life of the country.

The Republic recognizes the right of all citizens to work and shall do all in its power to give effect to this right.

The Republic, while remaining one and indivisible, shall recognize and promote local autonomy, fostering the greatest possible decentralization in those services which are administered by the State, and subordinating legislative methods and principles to the exigencies of decentralized and autonomous areas.

The State and the Catholic Church shall be sovereign and independent, each in its own sphere. Their relations shall be governed by the Lateran Pact ("Patti Lateranensi"), and any modification in the pact agreed upon by both parties shall not necessitate any revision of the Constitution.

All religious denominations shall have equal liberty before the law, denominations other than the Catholic having the right to worship according to their beliefs, in so far as they do not conflict with the common law of the country.

The Republic shall do all in its power to promote the development of culture and scientific and technical research. It shall also protect and preserve the countryside and the historical and artistic monuments which are the inheritance of the nation.

The juridical system of the Italian Republic shall be in conformity with the generally recognized practice of international law. The legal rights of foreigners in the country shall be regulated by law in accordance with international practice.

Any citizen of a foreign country who is deprived of democratic liberty such as is guaranteed under the Italian Constitution, has the right of asylum within the territory of the Republic in accordance with the terms of the law, and his extradition for political offences will not be granted.

Italy repudiates war as an instrument of offence against the liberty of other nations and as a means of resolving international disputes. Italy accepts, under parity with other nations, the limitations of sovereignty necessary for the preservation of peace and justice between nations. To that end she will support and promote international organizations.

The Constitution is further divided into Parts I and II, in which are set forth respectively the rights and responsibilities of the citizen and the administration of the Republic.

PART I

SECTION I—Civic Clauses (Articles 13-28)

The liberty of the individual is inviolable and no form of detention, restriction or inspection is permitted unless it be for juridical purposes and in accordance with the provisions of the law. The domicile of a person is likewise inviolable and shall be immune from forced inspection or sequestration, except according to the provisions of the law. Furthermore, all citizens shall be free to move wheresoever they will throughout the country, and may leave it and return to it without let or hindrance. Right of public meeting, if peaceful and without arms, is guaranteed. Secret organizations of a directly or indirectly political or military nature are, however, prohibited.

Freedom in the practice of religious faith is guaranteed.

The Constitution further guarantees complete freedom of thought, speech and writing, and lays down that the Press shall be entirely free from all control or censorship. No person may be deprived of civic or legal rights on political grounds.

The death penalty is not allowed under the Constitution except in case of martial law. The accused shall be considered "not guilty" until he is otherwise proven. All punishment shall be consistent with humanitarian practice and shall be directed towards the re-education of the criminal.

SECTION II—Ethical and Social Clauses (Articles 29-34)

The Republic regards the family as the fundamental basis of society and considers the parents to be responsible for the maintenance, instruction and education of the children. The Republic shall provide economic assistance for the family, with special regard to large families, and shall make provision for maternity, infancy and youth, subject always to the liberty and freedom of choice of the individuals as envisaged under the law.

Education, the arts and science shall be free, the function of the State being merely to indicate the general lines of instruction. Private entities and individuals shall have the right to conduct educational institutions without assistance from the State, but such non-State institutions must ensure to their pupils liberty and instruction equal to that in the State schools. Instructions of higher culture, universities and academies shall be autonomous within the limitations prescribed by the law.

Education is available to all and is free and obligatory for at least eight years. Higher education for students of proven merit shall be aided by scholarships and other allowances made by the Republic.

SECTION III—Economic Clauses (Articles 35-47)

The Republic shall safeguard the right to work in all its aspects, and shall promote agreement and co-operation with international organizations in matters pertaining to the regulation of labour and the rights of workers. The rights of Italian workers abroad shall be protected.

The worker shall be entitled to remuneration proportionate to the quantity and quality of his work, and in any case shall be ensured of sufficient to provide freedom and a dignified standard of life for himself and his family.

The maximum working hours shall be fixed by law, and the worker shall be entitled to a weekly day of rest and an annual holiday of nine days with pay.

Women shall have the same rights and, for equal work, the same remuneration as men. Conditions of work shall be regulated by their special family requirements and the needs of mother and child. The work of minors shall be specially protected.

All citizens have the right to sickness, unemployment and disability maintenance.

Liberty to organize in trade unions is guaranteed and any union may register as a legal entity, provided it is organized on a democratic basis. The right to strike is admitted within the limitations of the relevant legislation.

Private enterprise is permitted in so far as it does not run counter to the well-being of society nor constitute a danger to security, freedom and human dignity.

Ownership of private property is permitted and guaranteed within the limitations laid down by the law regarding the acquisition, extent and enjoyment of private property. Inheritance and testamentary bequests shall be regulated by law.

Limitation is placed by law on private ownership of land and on its use, with a view to its best exploitation for the benefit of the community.

The Republic recognizes the value of mutual co-operation and the right of the workers to participate in management.

The Republic shall encourage all forms of saving, by house purchase, by co-operative ownership and by investment in the public utility undertakings of the country.

SECTION IV—Political Clauses (Articles 48-54)

The electorate comprises all citizens, both men and women, who have attained their majority. Voting is free, equal and secret, and its exercise is a civic duty. All citizens have the right to associate freely together in political parties, and may also petition the Chambers to legislate as may be deemed necessary.

All citizens of both sexes may hold public office on equal terms.

Defence of his country is a sacred duty of the citizen, and military service is obligatory within the limits prescribed by law. Its fulfilment shall in no way prejudice the position of the worker nor hinder the exercise of his political rights. The organization of the armed forces shall be imbued with the spirit of democracy.

All citizens must contribute to the public expenditure, each in proportion to his capacity.

All citizens must be loyal to the Republic and observe the terms of the law and the Constitution.

PART II

SECTIONS I, II AND III (articles 55-100)

These sections are devoted to a detailed exposition of the Legislature and legislative procedure of the Republic.

Parliament shall comprise two Chambers, namely the Chamber of Deputies (Camera dei Deputati) and the Senate of the Republic (Senato).

The Chamber of Deputies is elected by direct universal suffrage, the number of Deputies being six hundred and thirty. All voters who on the day of the elections are twenty-five years of age, may be elected Deputies.

Seats are apportioned by dividing the number of inhabitants of the Republic, as shown in the last general census by six hundred and thirty, and allocating the seats proportionally to the population of each constituency.

The Senate of the Republic is elected on regional basis, the number of eligible Senators being three hundred and fifteen. No Region shall have less than seven Senators. Val d'Aosta has only one Senator.

Seats are allocated proportionally among the Regions in the same way as the Chamber of Deputies.

The Chamber of Deputies and the Senate of the Republic are elected for five years.

The term of each House cannot be extended except by law and only in the case of war.

Members of Parliament shall receive remuneration fixed by law.

The President of the Republic must be a citizen of at least fifty years of age and in full enjoyment of all civic and political rights. He shall be elected for a period of seven years (Articles 84-85).

The Government shall consist of the President of the Council and the Ministers who themselves shall form the Council. The President of the Council, or Prime Minister, shall be nominated by the President of the Republic, who shall also appoint the Ministers on the recommendation of the Prime Minister (Article 92).

SECTION IV (Articles 101-113) sets forth the judicial system and procedure.

SECTION V (Articles 114-133) deals with the division of the Republic into regions, provinces and communes, and sets forth the limits and extent of autonomy enjoyed by the regions. Under Article 131 the regions are enumerated as follows:

Piedmont	Marche
Lombardy	Lazio
Veneto	Abruzzi
Liguria	Molise
Emilia-Romagna	Campania
Tuscany	Puglia
Umbria	Basilicata

Calabria Sicily
Sardinia

Trentino-Alto Adige
Friuli-Venezia Giulia
Val d'Aosta

The last five-named regions shall have a wider form of autonomy based on constitutional legislation specially adapted to their regional characteristics (Article 116). Each region shall be administered by a Regional Council, in which is vested the legislative power and which may make suggestions for legislation to the Chambers, and the "Giunta regionale" which holds the executive power (Article 121).

The final articles provide for the establishment of the "Corte Costituzionale" to deal with constitutional questions and any revisions which may be found necessary after the Constitution has come into operation.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Corte Costituzionale: Palazzo Della Consulta, Piazza del Quirinale 41, Rome; consists of 15 judges, one third appointed by the President of the Republic, one third elected by Parliament in joint session, one third by the ordinary and administrative supreme courts; Pres. Prof. PAULO ROSSI; Sec.-Gen. Cons. Dott. ALDO MONACO.
Consiglio Superiore della Magistratura: Piazza della Indipendenza 6, Rome; Pres. the President of the Republic; Vice-Pres. (vacant).
Consiglio di Stato: Palazzo Spada, Piazza Capo di Ferro 13, Rome; established in accordance with Article 10 of the Constitution; has both consultative and judicial functions; Pres. VINCENZO UCCELLATORE.
Corte dei Conti: Via Baiamonti 25, Rome, and Via Barberini 38, Rome; functions as the court of public auditors for the state; Pres. GAETANO TEMPESTA.
Corte Suprema di Cassazione: Palazzo di Giustizia, Rome; supreme court of civil and criminal appeal; First Pres. TOMMASO NOVELLI; Vice-Pres. GOFFREDO ROSSI.

The Constitutional Court was established in 1956 and is an autonomous constitutional body, standing apart from the judicial system. Its most important function is to pronounce on the constitutionality of legislation both subsequent and prior to the present Constitution of 1948. It also judges accusations brought against the President of the Republic or ministers.

At the base of the system of penal jurisdiction are the Preture (District Courts), where offences carrying a sentence of up to three years' imprisonment are tried. Above the Preture are the Tribunali (Tribunals) and the Corti di Assise presso i Tribunali (Assize Courts attached to the Tribunals), where graver offences are dealt with. From these courts appeal lies to the Corti d'Appello (Courts of Appeal) and the parallel Corti di Assise d'Appello (Assize Courts of Appeal). Final appeal may be made, on juridical grounds only, to the Corte Suprema di Cassazione.
Civil cases may be taken in the first instance to the Giudici Conciliatori (Justices of the Peace), Preture or Tribunali, according to the economic value of the case. Appeal from the Giudici Conciliatori lies to the Preture, from the Preture to the Tribunali, from the Tribunali to the Corti d'Appello, and finally, as in penal justice, to the Corte Suprema di Cassazione on juridical grounds only.

Special departments for cases concerning labour relations or young persons are attached to civil courts. Cases concerned with the public service and its employees are tried by Tribunali Amministrativi Regionali and the Consiglio di Stato.

RELIGION

More than 90 per cent of the population of Italy profess the Roman Catholic faith.

Under the terms of the Lateran Pact, signed in 1929 between Mussolini and the Papal Secretary of State, Cardinal Gasparri, the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion was recognized as the official religion of Italy, and instruction in the Roman Catholic doctrine became compulsory in Italian schools. The Holy See was accorded sovereign rights in the Vatican City, which was granted extraterritorial rights as an independent State. In December 1978 a draft plan was approved for a new concordat whereby Roman Catholicism would no longer be the state religion.

THE PRESS

In view of Italy's population the number of daily newspapers is rather small, with the bulk of them appearing in the industrial north. Between 1944 and 1967 no fewer than 161 newspapers ceased publication. The total daily circulation in 1981 was approximately five million; sales in the north and centre of the country accounted for nine-tenths of this figure.

Rome and Milan are the only real press centres. Only two dailies manage to sustain a national circulation, Corriere della Sera in Milan and Rome and Il Giorno in Milan, followed by La Repubblica in Rome and Turin's La Stampa circulating in the north and centre. Otherwise the large dailies circulate in and reflect their own region; e.g. La Nazione serves Florence and its region, Il Messaggero and Il Tempo Rome and the centre, Genoa's Il Secolo XIX extends throughout the Italian Riviera, Il Mattino serves the Naples region and L'Ora Palermo. Although there are comparatively few small dailies, weekly papers are numerous.

The daily press has experienced economic difficulties for many years, but since 1973 rises in labour costs and the price of raw materials have created a critical situation. The dailies have become entirely dependent on financial support from large industrial companies, political parties or other social groups with substantial capital who are prepared to stand a financial loss in return for a measure of control over an important information medium. In 1979 control over the Corriere della Sera, Italy's leading daily newspaper, passed from the Montedison chemical company to the Rizzoli publishing company. Montedison has effective financial control of such important dailies as Il Messaggero, La Notte and Il Giornale Nuovo, the Milan paper. Fiat or other Agnelli concerns control La Stampa, Stampa Sera, Corriere dello Sport and a number of magazines and regional newspapers. Other important papers backed by industry include Il Resto del Carlino and La Nazione, associated with Eridania, Il Giorno owned by ENI, and Il Sole/24 Ore controlled by Confindustria. Financial institutions also have interests in the press. The Banco di Napoli, for example, has a large holding in La Gazzetta del Mezzogiorno and Il Mattino.

All the political parties represented in parliament have a daily or weekly paper as party organ. The most important are the Communist L'Unità, the Socialist Avanti! and the Christian Democrat Il Popolo. In addition political parties own or have a holding in papers which are not run as party organs. The Christian Democrats, for example, control seven provincial dailies. Catholic organizations have a controlling interest in several papers and Avvenire is owned totally by the Church.

The most important dailies in terms of circulation are: Milan's Corriere della Sera (700,000), Turin's La Stampa (404,000), L'Unità (Milan edition 450,000; Rome edition 300,000), Rome's Il Tempo (243,500), and Il Messaggero (295,000), Milan's Il Giorno (179,154), Florence's La Nazione (232,000), Bologna's Il Resto del Carlino (204,000), La Repubblica (325,000) and Rome's Paese Sera (200,000). The four dailies accorded most prestige for the standard of their articles and news coverage are the nationally circulating Corriere della Sera and Il Giorno, La Stampa and La Repubblica. The leading financial paper is Milan's Il Sole/24 Ore, closely followed by Il Globo in Rome. Italy's first popular daily, L'Occhio, was launched in 1979.

There are some 430 non-daily newspapers and over 4,000 periodicals. The illustrated weekly papers and magazines frequently have higher sales than the average daily. Ten of the largest appear in Milan, five in Rome and one in Turin. Many tend towards sensationalism, particularly the popular Domenica del Corriere, which has a circulation of almost one million, and the right wing Oggi and Gente. Other weekly illustrated periodicals with a large circulation include Epoca, L'Europeo and, largest of all, the Catholic La Famiglia Cristiana. Among the serious and influential magazines should be mentioned Panorama, L'Espresso, L'Europeo, Il Tempo, the financial Mondo Economico, the small circulating political and cultural Il Ponte, the Communist Rinascita and the right-wing Il Borghese.

RADIO AND TELEVISION

Broadcasting in Italy is a state monopoly. Since 1974, however, restrictions on local private cable-television services and relaying foreign television programmes have been relaxed. In April 1975 a law was passed designed to guarantee the political independence of the RAI and the objectivity of its news coverage. Notably, the new law sought to increase the autonomy of the two existing television channels and to reinforce parliamentary supervision of programme planning. Over 1,000 private local radio stations have begun broadcasting since a court case in 1975 established the right of every citizen to free local information.

Radiotelevisione Italiana (RAI-TV): 00195 Rome, Viale Mazzini 14; a joint stock company, responsible to the Ministry of Posts and Telegraphs, to which are ceded all radio and television rights; a permanent parliamentary commission of senators and deputies from all political groups formulates general guidelines for programmes and oversees the administration of RAI; an administrative council elected by the parliamentary commission itself elects the Director-General; Pres. SERGIO ZAVOLI; Vice-Pres. Prof. GIAN PIERO ORSELLO; Dir.-Gen. VILLY DE LUCA.

RADIO

Programmes: National Programme (general), Second Programme (recreational), Third Programme (educational); there are also regional programmes in Italian and in the languages of ethnic minorities.

FOREIGN AND OVERSEAS SERVICE (Radio Roma)

Broadcasts in Albanian, Amharic, Arabic, Bulgarian, Czech, Danish, English, Esperanto, French, German, Greek, Hungarian, Italian, Lithuanian, Maltese, Polish, Portuguese, Romanian, Russian, Serbo-Croat, Slovak, Slovene, Somali, Spanish, Swedish, Turkish and Ukrainian; broadcasts to Africa, the Americas, Australia, Europe, Japan, the Near East and South Asia.

In 1979 there were 13,634,252 radio receivers.

TELEVISION

There are three television channels, the National Programme, the Second Programme and the Third Programme. Between them the former carry some 200 hours of advertising annually. There are local programmes in Italian and also in German for the Alto Adige.

In 1979 there were 13,170,117 television licences.

ATOMIC ENERGY

The nuclear sector currently provides only 1.1 per cent of Italy's energy requirements. After considerable delays, construction is continuing on a BWR twin-reactor plant with a projected capacity of 2,000 MWe at Montalto di Castro. An energy plan for the 1980s sees nuclear stations contributing 11.6 per cent of the country's energy by 1990 with four new twin-reactor plants and the existing 860 MWe plant at Caorso coming into operation.

LIECHTENSTEIN

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Principality of Liechtenstein lies on the upper Rhine between Austria and Switzerland. The climate is mild. The official language is German, of which a dialect—Alemannish—is spoken. The population is predominantly Roman Catholic. The national flag (proportions five by three) consists of two equal horizontal stripes of royal blue and red, with a golden princely crown in the upper left-hand corner. The capital is Vaduz.

Recent History

Liechtenstein has been an independent state since 1719, except while under Napoleon's domination. Switzerland took over the diplomatic representation for the Principality from Austria in 1919. A Postal Union with Switzerland was agreed upon in 1921 and in 1923 a treaty was made with Switzerland whereby Liechtenstein was incorporated in the Swiss Customs Union. Franz Josef II succeeded as ruling prince in 1938. Liechtenstein became a party to the International Court of Justice in December 1949 and in November 1978 it was admitted to the Council of Europe as the smallest member.

After 42 years as dominant party in the Government, the Progressive Citizens' Party (FBP) was ousted by the Fatherland Union (VU) in the Landtag elections of February 1970, but it regained its majority four years later. In elections to the Landtag in February 1978 the VU, led by Hans Brunhart, won eight of the 15 seats, though with a minority of the votes cast, while seven seats were won by the FBP, led by Dr. Walter Kieber, Chief of Government since March 1974. After protracted negotiations, Brunhart succeeded Dr. Kieber in April. This ended Liechtenstein's longest government crisis (lasting almost three months) over which of the two should hold the Foreign Affairs portfolio. It was eventually agreed that they would share the responsibility.

The voting age was lowered to 20 in 1969, but a proposal to give women the vote, though approved by Parliament, was rejected in referenda in 1971 and 1973. Prince Franz Josef signed a law in August 1976 which gave the communes the right to hold referenda to decide whether women should vote in a communal election. Such a referendum was held in Vaduz in September 1976; the proposal was approved and women voted there for the first time in April 1977. From May 1980 women were also allowed to vote in the commune of Gamprin.

Government

The constitution of the hereditary Principality provides for a unicameral parliament (Landtag), composed of 15 members, 9 from the Upper Country and 6 from the Lower Country, elected (by men only) for four years, using proportional representation. A five-member Government is elected by the Landtag for its duration and confirmed by the Sovereign. Liechtenstein is united in a Customs Union with Switzerland, which also represents the principality abroad.

Defence

Although Liechtensteiners under the age of 60 are liable to military service in an emergency, there has been no standing army since 1868 and there is only a small police force of thirty-eight men and twenty-two auxiliaries.

Economic Affairs

In terms of average G.N.P., Liechtenstein is one of the richest nations in the world, with a per capita product of about U.S. $11,000 in 1977, compared with $9,320 in the U.S.A. It has developed rapidly from a predominantly agricultural economy before the Second World War to a major industrial one. Industry now employs over 50 per cent of the working population and is largely Swiss owned and run. However, Liechtenstein-based companies are exporting increasing volumes directly, rather than via Switzerland, and more and more of their production is undertaken in subsidiary plants abroad, largely due to the shortage of manpower.

The metal, machinery and precision instruments industry is by far the most prominent sector, employing 4,502 workers in 1980. The most important products are high frequency installations, boilers for central heating, hardware, small machinery, canned goods, furniture and upholstery, chemical and pharmaceutical goods, vacuum installations, optical and measuring instruments, toys, oil tanks, paints and varnishing and leather goods. Artificial teeth are made in Schaan and are now exported to about 100 countries. The printing and sale of postage stamps, mainly to tourists, provides about 15 per cent of the national income. The pottery and ceramic industry in Nendeln is the oldest in the Principality and art pottery is also produced in Schaan. The textile industry, mainly cotton, is based in Triesen and Vaduz. The building and hotel trades are also highly developed. There is no unemployment in Liechtenstein. One-third of the population are resident foreigners, many of whom provide the labour for industry. In 1980 only 3.8 per cent of the labour force was employed in agriculture, which is of relatively little importance.

With a very limited home market, exports have risen at a high rate; in 1950 they amounted to only 15 million Swiss francs, in 1960 to 83 million, and by 1980 they had reached 887 million. In 1980 22.4 per cent of the exports went to Switzerland, most of the rest going to the other EFTA members and to the EEC countries. Much foreign currency also comes in from tourists.

Because of the stable political situation, the absolute bank secrecy and the low fiscal charges, more than 25,000 foreign companies and holding corporations have nominal offices in Liechtenstein. Such firms pay no tax on profit or income. Their normal tax rate is one-thousandth on paid-in capital and reserves with an annual minimum of 1,000 Swiss francs. In April 1980, however, a new law was passed which tightened controls on foreign firms, many of which will now be subject to audit and must be entered in the public register.

LIECHTENSTEIN

Transport and Communications

Good roads connect all the towns and villages and most transport is by road. A tunnel connects the Rhine and Samina valleys. There are 18.5 km. of railway track.

Social Welfare

Accident insurance has been obligatory since 1931, pensions and life insurance since 1954. Family allowances were introduced in 1957 and unemployment benefits in 1970. Sickness insurance was made compulsory in 1971.

Education

Basic instruction is given for five years at a primary school (Volksschule), after which a pupil may transfer to a lower secondary school for three years, a secondary school (Realschule) for four years, or to the Liechtensteinisches Gymnasium (grammar school) for eight years. There is no university. Many Liechtensteiners continue their studies at universities in Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany or Switzerland. Liechtenstein has a technical evening school, a music school, a school for mentally handicapped children and two schools for backward children.

Tourism

Liechtenstein stands in an Alpine setting in the Upper Rhine area. The princely residence, Schloss Vaduz, stands

THE CONSTITUTION

By the Constitution of October 5th, 1921, the monarchy is hereditary in the male line. The reigning Prince exercises the legislative right jointly with a Diet (Landtag) or parliament of 15 members elected for four years by general and secret ballot. All male citizens of over 20 years have been eligible to vote since the voting age was lowered by a year in October 1969. The voters participate directly in the legislation by means of the initiative and the referendum.

In the case of adjournment or dissolution, the Diet is replaced by a National Committee consisting of the President of the Diet and four Deputies. The members of the Government are nominated by the Prince on the proposition of the Diet for four years.

By a Treaty made with Switzerland in 1923 Liechtenstein is incorporated in Swiss Customs territory, and uses Swiss currency, customs and postal administration.

LUXEMBOURG

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg lies south-east of Belgium, between France and the Federal Republic of Germany. The climate is temperate. French is the official language and is generally used for administrative purposes, while German is the written language of commerce and the press. The spoken language is Letzeburgish, a German-Moselle-Frankish dialect. Ninety-six per cent of the population are Roman Catholic and just over 1 per cent Protestant. The national flag (proportions five by three) consists of three equal horizontal stripes—red, white and light blue. The capital is Luxembourg-Ville (Lützelburg).

Recent History

As a founder member of the EEC, of which Luxembourg-Ville is one of the main bases, and a member of the European Coal and Steel Community and of EURATOM, Luxembourg has played a full part in post-war moves towards European integration.

The Belgian-Luxembourg Economic Union (BLEU) has existed since 1921, except for the period from 1940 to 1944 when the Grand Duchy was occupied by Germany. In 1948 the Benelux Economic Union was inaugurated between Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands, becoming effective in 1960, and in 1970 establishing the three countries as a single customs area.

In November 1964 Grand Duchess Charlotte abdicated after a reign of 45 years, and was succeeded by her son, Prince Jean. After the fall of the Government in October 1968 Pierre Werner headed a coalition of the Parti Chrétien Social and the Parti Démocratique ("Liberals") from early 1969 until May 1974. In the general election of May 1974 the Parti Chrétien Social lost its political dominance for the first time since 1919, and in June a left-of-centre coalition between the Parti Ouvrier Socialiste and the Parti Démocratique was formed under Gaston Thorn, Minister for Foreign Affairs since 1969. At the next general elections, in June 1979, the Parti Chrétien Social gained six new seats, and in July Pierre Werner again formed a coalition government between his party and the Parti Démocratique.

In January 1981 Gaston Thorn was appointed President of the European Commission's Council of Ministers. Madame Colette Flesch, leader of the Parti Démocratique, became Deputy Prime Minister with the portfolio of Foreign Affairs.

In the municipal elections of October 1981 the Parti Ouvrier Socialiste won 105 seats, the Parti Chrétien Social 95 and the Parti Démocratique 59. There was a significant decline in support for the smaller parties.

Government

Luxembourg is a hereditary and constitutional monarchy. Legislative power is exercised by the unicameral Chamber of Deputies, with 59 members elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution) on the basis of proportional representation. Some legislative functions are also entrusted to the advisory Council of State, with 21 members appointed for life by the Grand Duke, but the Council can be overridden by the Chamber.

Executive power is vested in the Grand Duke but is normally exercised by the Council of Ministers, led by the President of the Government (Prime Minister). The Grand Duke appoints Ministers but they are responsible to the Chamber. Luxembourg is divided into 12 cantons.

Defence

Luxembourg is a member of the Western European Union and since 1949 of NATO. Compulsory military service was abolished in 1967, but Luxembourg maintains an army of volunteers totalling 690 and a gendarmerie numbering 450 (July 1981). The defence budget for 1980 was 1,230 million francs.

Economic Affairs

Inhabitants of Luxembourg have one of the highest levels of national income per head in the EEC. The economy relies mainly on banking and the iron and steel industry, which employ almost 5 per cent and 40 per cent of the working population respectively.

Large deposits of iron ore (minette) are found in the south-west, although they are not sufficient to supply all the needs of industry and some iron ore has to be imported, as well as much of the coal necessary for iron and steel manufacture. In recent years industrial output has decreased, despite efforts made since 1960 to diversify the economy and expand existing companies. Since 1974 the steel industry, as in the rest of Europe, has been in recession; production of iron ore fell from 2,686,000 metric tons in 1974 to 630,000 metric tons in 1979, and production of pig iron from 5,469,000 metric tons to 3,801,000 tons over the same period. Arbed, the company which accounts for 90 per cent of steel output in Luxembourg and which is Europe's fourth largest steel producer, has been suffering progressive annual production losses, with a decline of 6.7 per cent in 1980 to 4,620,000 metric tons. In 1978 it announced plans for a five-year programme of restructuring and modernization, but in 1980, despite government aid worth 4,000 million francs, it found itself unable to provide the further 36,500 million francs necessary for the project's success. By 1981 the number employed in the steel industry had fallen to 18,000 from 26,400 in 1975 and by the end of the restructuring plan the number of jobs will fall further to 15,600. The possibility of a merger with the major Belgian steel concerns was discussed in early 1981, and production co-operation with steel companies in the Federal Republic of Germany is also foreseen.

Banking has assumed greater importance as the pre-dominance of steel decreases. This has benefited government finances by boosting taxation revenue, especially from the country's 29 German banks. By September 1981 there were 111 banks, mainly foreign, established in Luxembourg with total assets of 4,000,000 million francs.

Agriculture is a source of livelihood for about 6 per cent of the active population, and accounted for approximately 3.6 per cent of G.D.P. in 1980. Barley, oats and potatoes are grown in the north, and wheat, fruit and grapes for wine in the south. Cattle-raising is well-developed.

In 1973 Luxembourg was one of the eight original countries which established a joint currency float (the "snake") which in 1979 was converted into the European Monetary System. Initially the strength of the currency within the "snake" and the low inflation rates of Luxembourg's main trading partners, the Federal Republic of Germany and Belgium (which together supply 71 per cent of imports and take 48.5 per cent of exports), aided Luxembourg's trade position. However, the deficit on trade in goods and services increased from 926 million francs in 1976 to 19,000 million francs in 1980. The inflation rate, which reached 10.1 per cent in the year to August 1976, fell to 6.8 per cent in 1977 and 3.1 per cent in 1978, but rose to 6.3 per cent in 1980.

In March 1981 the Belgian-Luxembourg Economic Union (BLEU) was re-negotiated, enabling Luxembourg to alter the parity of the Luxembourg franc with the Belgian franc and to take part in the decisions of the Belgian central bank. The Institut Monétaire Luxembourgeois, to be established in 1982, will centralize several monetary functions and permit the country to play an active part in the EMS and the IMF, while acting as an intermediary between the Luxembourg banks and the Belgian central bank.

In 1977 the Government, trade unions and employers reached an agreement to stimulate the economy and make strikes illegal. Subsequent legislation also empowered the Government forcibly to curb unemployment if specified levels are reached. In March 1981 unemployment was 1,535, or 1 per cent of the working population, an increase of 50 per cent over the previous year, and job creation schemes in community service have been implemented.

The 1980 draft budget projected a 3 per cent increase in G.N.P. over the year and planned to provide grants for the transport network and the iron and steel industry, entailing a deficit of 200 million francs. Reforms were proposed to reduce corporation tax, raise the tax-free income allowance from 25,000 francs to 40,000 francs to stimulate saving and extend the maternity allowance to non-salaried women in an effort to boost the low birthrate of native Luxembourgers. To continue these projects, the budget for 1981 planned a record deficit of 3,100 million francs, which was covered by drawing on the budget reserve and by increased borrowing. A total of 52,000 million francs were to be spent on industrial investment, an increase of 12 per cent over 1980.

Transport and Communications

In 1980 the railway system covered 274 km., of which 137 km. were electrified. At the end of 1980 there were 5,094 km. of roads, of which 44 km. were motorway and 868 km. main roads. There is an airport near Luxembourg-Ville, served by Luxair, the national airline, and other international lines. The canalization of the Moselle has given Luxembourg direct access to Rhine shipping through the port of Mertert.

Social Welfare

Although virtually all types of employment are subject to compulsory social insurance, the Government does not itself operate the Social Services. They are administered by semi-public bodies, composed of Government representatives, and elected representatives of employers and employees. Social Service benefits are also guaranteed to foreigners in accordance with International Conventions signed with individual countries. The comprehensive social insurance scheme covers accident insurance (compulsorily paid by all employers), health insurance (compulsory for employees and self-employed and voluntary for others), invalid and old age pensions (contributions shared equally between employer and employee, the self-employed also making a compulsory contribution), family allowances, and unemployment benefit, which amounts to 80 per cent of gross earnings.

Education

Education in Luxembourg is compulsory from 6 to 15 years. German is the initial language of instruction at primary level. French is added to the programme in the second year and becomes increasingly important until it replaces German as the language of instruction at secondary level.

At the age of 12 children can choose between secondary school (lycée) and technical education (enseignement secondaire technique). The first year of secondary school is a general orientation course on comprehensive lines, which is then followed by a choice between two sections: the Classical Section with an emphasis on Latin, and the Modern Section which stresses English and other modern languages. The completed secondary course lasts seven years and leads to the Certificat de Fin d'Etudes Secondaires which qualifies for University Entrance.

The enseignement secondaire technique, which leads to vocational and technical qualifications, consists of three courses: an orientation and observation course (three years), an intermediate course (three years) and an upper course (three years).

In 1969 a Centre Universitaire was created, offering one-year courses in the humanities, sciences and law and economics, and also training courses for lawyers and teachers. Students also attend foreign universities, mainly in France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium or Switzerland.

Tourism

Luxembourg is famous for the beauty of its scenery. Many tourist resorts have grown up round the ruins of medieval castles such as Clerf, Esch/Sauer, Vianden and Wiltz. There are many footpaths and hiking trails.

100 centimes = 1 Luxembourg franc (Belgian currency is also legal tender).

Coins: 25 and 50 centimes; 1, 5, 10 and 20 Luxembourg francs.

Notes: 20, 50 and 100 Luxembourg francs; 20, 50, 100, 500, 1,000 and 5,000 Belgian francs.

Exchange rates (October 1981): 1 Luxembourg franc = 1 Belgian franc;

1,000 Luxembourg francs = £14.40 = $26.92.

Note: The Luxembourg franc is at par with the Belgian franc. From September 1949 to August 1971 the par value of the Luxembourg franc was 2 U.S. cents (U.S. $1 = 50.00 francs). Between December 1971 and February 1973 the central exchange rate was $1 = 44.82 Luxembourg francs. In terms of sterling, the exchange rate was £1 = 120.00 Luxembourg francs from November 1967 to August 1971; and £1 = 116.78 francs from December 1971 to June 1972. Since March 1973 the Luxembourg franc has been allowed to "float" against the U.S. dollar and sterling. For average rates, see the chapter on Belgium.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution now in force dates back to October 17th, 1868, but in 1919 a Constituent Assembly introduced into it some important changes, declaring that the sovereign power resided in the nation, that all secret treaties were denounced, and that deputies were to be elected, by Scrutin de liste, and by proportional representation, on the basis of complete universal suffrage. Electors must be citizens of Luxembourg and must have attained eighteen years of age. Candidates for election must have attained twenty-one years of age. The Grand Duke chooses the Ministers, may intervene in legislative questions, and has certain judicial powers. There is a single-chamber legislature, the Chamber of Deputies, with 59 members elected for five years. The number of deputies was enlarged to accord with the increase in population registered in the census of 1960. There are four electoral districts, the North, the Centre, the South and East. By the law of October 9th, 1956, the Constitution was further revised, by the following stipulation: "The exercise of prerogatives granted by the Constitution to the legislative, executive and judiciary powers, can, by treaty, be temporarily vested in institutions of international law." In addition to the Council of Ministers, which consists of the President of the Government (Prime Minister) and at least three other ministers, Luxembourg has a Council of State, which is the supreme administrative tribunal and also fulfils certain legislative functions, comprising 21 members nominated by the Sovereign.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The lowest courts in Luxembourg are those of the Justices of the Peace, of which there are three, at Luxembourg-Ville, Esch-sur-Alzette and Diekirch. These are competent to deal with civil, commercial and criminal cases of minor importance. Above these are the two District Courts, Luxembourg being divided into the judicial districts of Luxembourg and Diekirch. These are competent to deal with civil, commercial and criminal cases. The Superior Court of Justice includes both a court of appeal, hearing decisions made by District Courts, and a Cour de Cassation. The Court of Assizes, which falls within the jurisdiction of the Superior Court, hears criminal cases. As the judicial system of the Grand Duchy does not employ the jury system, a defendant is acquitted if fewer than four of the six presiding judges find him guilty. The highest administrative court is the Comité du Contentieux du Conseil d'Etat. Special tribunals exist to adjudicate upon various matters of social administration such as social insurance. The Department of the Procureur général is responsible for the administration of the judiciary and the supervision of judicial police investigations.

Judges are appointed for life by the Grand Duke, and are not removable except by judicial sentence. Capital punishment was abolished in 1979.

Superior Court of Justice: Chief Justice ETIENNE KLEIN.

MALTA

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Malta comprises a group of islands (mainly Malta, Gozo and Comino) in the central Mediterranean, 93 km. (58 miles) south of Sicily and 290 km. (180 miles) north of the Libyan coast. The climate is warm, with average temperatures of 22.6°C. (72.7°F) in summer and 13.7°C (56.6°F) in winter. Average annual rainfall is 559mm. (22 inches). Maltese and English are the official languages though Italian is widely spoken. The chief religion is Roman Catholicism. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) consists of two equal vertical bands, white in the hoist and red in the fly, with the George Cross, edged with red, in a canton on the white band. The capital is Valletta.

Recent History

Malta became a Crown Colony of the United Kingdom in 1814. Constitutions which gave the islands limited self-government but which reserved defence, foreign affairs and other matters to the representative of the British Government were in force in 1921-36, 1947-59 and 1962-64. In the intervening periods the representative of the British Government exercised executive authority. The conservative Nationalist Party of Dr. Giorgio Borg Olivier, which had the support of the Roman Catholic Church, won elections to a new Assembly in February 1962 and talks began on independence. Malta became an independent sovereign state, within the Commonwealth, on September 21st, 1964. At the same time defence and financial aid agreements, effective over a ten-year period, were reached with the United Kingdom.

In June 1971 a Labour Government under Dom Mintoff came to power with socialist and nationalist aims. The first Maltese-born Governor-General was appointed in July. Pursuing a policy of non-alignment, the Government concluded agreements for cultural, economic and commercial co-operation with several East European countries, Italy, Libya, Tunisia, the U.S.S.R., the U.S.A., the People's Republic of China and others, and received technical assistance, notably from Libya. On taking office the Labour Government declared invalid the 1970 agreement with the United Kingdom, dealing with the question of aid to Malta. Mintoff proposed a new agreement which would safeguard Malta's sovereignty and ensure that the economy benefited from the NATO military base. A new agreement was signed in March 1972, under which Malta received £14 million sterling in rent annually until March 1979 and further sums from NATO countries. The size of the base and freedom of movement allowed to forces' shipping were reduced. British troops were finally withdrawn in March 1979.

Malta became a republic on December 13th, 1974. Sir Anthony Mamo, until then Governor-General, became President and Head of State. A general election was held in September 1976 in which the Labour Party was returned to power with a narrow majority. In December 1976 Sir Anthony Mamo was succeeded as President by Dr. Anton Buttigieg, a former Minister of Justice. Measures passed in 1977 to regulate industry, and proposals adopted in January 1978 by Malta's largest trade union and the Labour Party for close co-operation, were criticized by the Nationalist Party and the other unions. In February 1981 tension increased between the Government and the opposition Nationalist Party, as a result of a bill, passed in March, restricting the power of the law courts to challenge government actions and decisions. The next general election took place on December 12th.

In August 1980 Malta's relations with Libya deteriorated over the question of oil-drilling rights in the Mediterranean. The matter was referred to the UN Security Council in September, but the dispute continued in 1981. Libya banned imports from Malta between February and April 1981. In January an agreement was signed providing the U.S.S.R. with oil storage and refuelling facilities in Malta. Dom Mintoff has asked Italy, France, the U.S.A., Tunisia, Algeria and the U.S.S.R. to guarantee the country's neutrality. In March 1981 the Italian Parliament ratified the agreement signed in September 1980, under which Italy was to guarantee Malta's neutrality and give financial and technical aid over five years.

Government

Under the 1974 Constitution, legislative power is held by the unicameral House of Representatives, with 65 members elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution), using proportional representation. The President is a constitutional Head of State, elected for a five-year term by the House, and executive power is exercised by the Cabinet. The President appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet is responsible to the House.

Defence

The armed forces of Malta consist of two small regular units (800 strong) and a para-military force of 3,000 Pioneers (July 1981). Military service is voluntary. An agreement with NATO signed in March 1972, under which units of the United Kingdom's Royal Navy and Royal Air Force were stationed in Malta, expired in March 1979, by which time the withdrawal of British troops had been completed. The defence budget for 1981 was £M3.0 million.

Economic Affairs

The rundown in British defence expenditure in Malta set in motion as early as 1959 a process of economic restructuring to offset the loss of this long-established and principal component of the Maltese economy. The major sources of income have come to be light industry, tourism, the dockyard and agriculture. Local products now being exported include textiles and clothing (which in 1979 contributed 46.2 per cent of export earnings), footwear, metal manufactures and plastics. New industries and building for the tourist trade have been encouraged by the Malta Development Corporation, and efforts are being made to turn the island into a major transshipment centre by the development of a new harbour at Marsaxlokk Bay. Shipbuilding and ship-repairing are of prime importance since Malta is ideally situated in the centre of the Mediterranean. Since their nationalization in 1973, Malta Drydocks have been running profitably, receiving shipbuilding and repair orders worth £M6.5 million in 1979. The new Red China Dock has been built to increase facilities for shipbuilding and the production of non-maritime heavy industrial equipment. Agricultural exports include potatoes, onions, tomatoes and flowers.

In 1976 the G.N.P. at factor cost stood at £M207.6 million and rose to an estimated £M306.6 million in 1979. The balance of payments remained favourable despite world-wide inflation, with earnings from tourism and foreign investments covering a visible trade deficit. In 1979 there was a surplus of about £M19 million on Malta's current account, notwithstanding the trade gap which widened to £M119.8 million. In 1977 the rate of inflation rose to 10 per cent because of the abolition of subsidies, but fell to 4.7 per cent in 1978. However, the inflation rate rose again to 11.7 per cent in 1979 and to about 16 per cent in 1980, a major factor being the rising cost of imports, in spite of price and profit controls. Unemployment in 1979 was the lowest in 25 years at 2.4 per cent, but had risen to over 4 per cent by February 1981. Malta's largest economic sector, textile manufacture, has suffered from protectionist measures taken by the European Community.

The supply of petroleum from Libya at a reduced price enabled the development of factories and other projects until 1980, when the agreement was terminated, causing an enormous increase in the price of oil. Assistance has also been provided by Abu Dhabi and Saudi Arabia, the latter having loaned Malta £10 million in 1981 for the construction of a modern port. The People's Republic of China supplied a six-year interest-free loan in 1972 of £M16.9 million. In 1980 Italy agreed to provide financial and technical assistance to Malta until the end of 1983. Malta's economic objectives were established in the 1973-80 development plan. Total investment over the plan period was assessed at about £M123 million, of which £M94 million was to be invested by the Government on infrastructure and social projects, as well as on direct productive activities. In 1977 it was estimated that, to reach the plan's target, the G.D.P. needed to rise by 8 per cent per annum for the remaining years of the plan. The fishing industry benefited in 1978 from a £M3.5 million plan to expand the trawler fleet with Kuwaiti and Libyan aid. In July 1979 Malta was receiving aid from the EEC totalling 26 million units of account.

The closure of the British base in 1979 meant a loss in total annual revenue of £M28 million. For the first time since it came to power, the Mintoff administration planned a budget deficit.

Transport and Communications

There were 1,278 km. of surfaced and macadamized roads in 1980. All towns and villages are linked by frequent bus services. The international airport is at Luqa. The main harbour, Valletta, is used annually by over 3,000 vessels.

Social Welfare

Social Security is provided under the National Insurance Act, 1956, the National Assistance Act, 1956, and the Old Age Pensions Act, 1948. The National Insurance Act provides for a comprehensive scheme of social insurance.

Other social welfare programmes include social work with families, care and protection of children and a probation service. These services are provided under different statutes and subsidiary legislation.

Education

Education is compulsory between 6 and 16, and is free in government schools. Secondary education begins at the age of eleven, lasts five years and leads to the Ordinary Level of the British General Certificate of Education or equivalent. However, after the second year, students can opt for craft courses of three or four years' duration in technical institutes and trade schools, some of which lead to City and Guilds of London certificates at craft level. Upper Secondary education provides two courses leading to the Advanced Level of the G.C.E. Further education is available at the University of Malta. There are also a number of technical institutes, specialist schools and an extended skill training scheme for trade school leavers.

Tourism

The island has climatic, scenic and historical assets. Excavations indicate the existence of an advanced culture dating from about 4000 B.C. There are fine beaches. Tourism continues to be a major source of Malta's income, yielding foreign exchange earnings of £M111.9 million in 1980. Tourists come mainly from the United Kingdom, Italy, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Benelux, Austria, Switzerland and Scandinavia. Efforts are being made to advertise more widely and to attract more visitors in winter. In 1980, 728,732 tourists visited Malta.

Public Holidays

1982: March 31st (National Day), April 9th (Good Friday), May 1st (May Day), August 15th (Assumption), December 13th (Republic Day), December 25th (Christmas Day).

1983: January 1st (New Year's Day).

Weights and Measures

The imperial system of weights and measures is being replaced by the metric system; metric linear measures and metric units of volume are in force, and metric units of weight were introduced in 1979.

Currency and Exchange Rates

1,000 mils = 100 cents = 1 Maltese pound (£M).

Exchange rates (October 1981):

£1 sterling = 72.4 Maltese cents;

U.S. $1 = 38.7 Maltese cents.

£M100 = £138.16 sterling = $258.22.

Note: Before December 1971 the Maltese pound was at par with the pound sterling. Between November 1967 and August 1971 the exchange rate was £M1 = U.S. $2.40. From December 1971 to June 1972 the rates were £M1 = £1.025 sterling = $2.671. In May 1972 the Maltese pound was divided into cents and mils, replacing shillings and pence. Since the "floating" of sterling in June 1972 the value of the Maltese pound has been determined in relation to the currencies of the country's main trading partners. The average value of the Maltese pound was $2.4569 in 1971; $2.6095 in 1972; $2.7232 in 1973; $2.5947 in 1974; $2.6202 in 1975; $2.3534 in 1976; $2.3688 in 1977; $2.5974 in 1978; $2.7911 in 1979; $2.8962 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

On December 13th, 1974, the Independence Constitution of 1964 was substantially amended to bring into effect a Republican Constitution, under the terms of which Malta became a democratic republic within the Commonwealth, founded on work and on respect for the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual. The new constitution provided for the creation of the office of President of Malta to replace that of Governor-General.

The religion of the Maltese people is recognized to be the Roman Catholic Apostolic Religion and the Church Authorities have the constitutional right and duty to teach according to its principles. The religious teaching of the Roman Catholic Church is provided in all State schools as part of compulsory education.

The Constitution provides that the national language and the language of the Courts is Maltese but that both Maltese and English are official languages.

An independent Public Services Commission consisting of three to five members is appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister to make recommendations to the Prime Minister concerning appointments to public office and the dismissal and disciplinary control of persons holding public office.

An Employment Commission, consisting of a chairman and four other members, the function of which is to ensure that in respect of employment no distinction, exclusion or preference that is not justifiable is made or given in favour of or against any person by reason of his political opinion, is also provided for.

The Judicature is independent.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES

The Constitution upholds the right to work and to reasonable hours of work, the safe-guarding of rights of women workers, the encouragement of private economic enterprise, the encouragement of co-operatives, the provision of free and compulsory primary education, and the provision of social assistance and insurance.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS OF THE INDIVIDUAL

The Constitution provides for the protection of the right to life, freedom from arbitrary arrest or detention, protection of freedom of conscience, protection from discrimination on the grounds of race, etc.

THE PRESIDENT

Under the Constitution the office of President becomes vacant after five years from the date of appointment made by resolution of the House of Representatives. He appoints the Prime Minister, choosing the Member of the House of Representatives whom he judges to be ablest to command the confidence of a majority of the Members, and on the advice of the Prime Minister he appoints the other Ministers, the Chief Justice, the Judges and the Attorney-General.

THE CABINET

The Cabinet consists of the Prime Minister and such number of other Ministers as recommended by the Prime Minister.

PARLIAMENT

The House of Representatives consists of such number of members, being an odd number and divisible by the number of divisions, as Parliament by law determines from time to time. At the moment this number is sixty-five. In future the electoral divisions are not to be fewer than nine and not more than fifteen, as Parliament may from time to time determine. The normal life of the House of Representatives is five years, after which a general election is held. Election is by universal adult suffrage on the principle of proportional representation. The age of majority is eighteen years.

MONACO

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag

The Principality of Monaco lies on France's south-eastern Mediterranean coast. The climate is fine and warm with very mild winters. The official language is French but Monégasque (a mixture of French and Italian), Italian and English are also spoken. Most of the population are Roman Catholics. The national flag (proportions officially 5 by 4) has two horizontal stripes of red and white.

History

The Principality has existed since the tenth century. It was abolished during the French Revolution but re-established in 1814. In 1861 Monaco became an independent state. Prince Albert, great-grandfather of the reigning sovereign, Prince Rainier III, promulgated a constitution in 1911. An agreement in 1918 between France and Monaco made provision for France to defend the principality in return for general conformity with France's interests. A new constitution was introduced in 1962, granting more power to the elected National Council and renouncing the principle of divine right. In January 1978 the National and Democratic Union, which supports Prince Rainier, won all 18 seats on the National Council, thus regaining the two seats lost to the opposition parties in the previous elections held in 1973.

Government

Legislative power is held jointly by the Prince, an hereditary ruler, and the unicameral National Council, with 18 members elected by universal adult suffrage for five years. The electorate comprises only true-born Monégasque citizens aged 25 years or over. Executive power is vested in the Prince and exercised jointly with the four-member Council of Government, headed by a Minister of State (a French civil servant chosen by the Prince). The Prince represents the Principality in its relations with foreign powers, and signs and ratifies treaties.

Economic Affairs

Revenue is derived mainly from real estate, industry and tourism. There is also a thriving banking and insurance sector. Nationals of Monaco and foreign residents do not pay income tax, although French nationals living in the Principality are now liable to French taxation.

Since 1958 land reclamation projects have increased Monaco's territory by 20 per cent, the land thus created being used for new hotels and apartments and light industries. Industrial policy has concentrated on specialized fields such as pharmaceuticals, micro-electronics, cosmetics and plastics. Small manufacturing companies accounted for 23 per cent of Monaco's turnover of F.Fr. 5,200 million in 1978. Monaco has also become an important art market.

Tourism

The pleasant climate and the amenities of Monte-Carlo, including the world famous Casino, have made Monaco a leading centre for tourism both in summer and winter. Between 1970 and 1980 about 1,200 new hotel rooms were made available, to cater for a wider range of tourists. In 1980, 220,725 tourists visited Monaco, an increase of 11 per cent over 1979.

THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of January 7th, 1911 (modified in November 1917), provided for a National Council elected by a panel of 30 members composed of delegates of the municipality, and 21 electors appointed by universal suffrage. The legislative power was exercised by the Prince and the National Council, which contained 18 members elected for five years. The executive government was exercised, under the authority of the Sovereign, by the Minister of State, assisted by the three members of the Council of Government.

On December 17th, 1962, a new Constitution was promulgated by Prince Rainier. Any future amendments to this may be made only with the approval of the elected National Council. The text maintains the traditional hereditary monarchy though the principle of divine right is renounced. The right of association, trade union freedom and the right to strike are guaranteed. The Supreme Tribunal safeguards fundamental liberties. The National Council is to be elected by direct universal suffrage. The Constitution also bestows the franchise on women.

THE NETHERLANDS

INTRODUCTORY SURVEY

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of the Netherlands is situated in Western Europe, bounded to the east by the Federal Republic of Germany and to the south by Belgium. Its northern and western shores are washed by the North Sea. The climate is temperate. The language is Dutch. About 30 per cent of the population are Protestant, 40 per cent are Roman Catholic and 26 per cent do not profess any religion. The national flag (proportions three by two) carries three equal horizontal bands of red, white and blue. The capital is Amsterdam, but the seat of government is The Hague ('s Gravenhage).

Recent History

The Netherlands was occupied by Germany during the Second World War. Following its liberation in 1945 it chose to abandon a traditional policy of neutrality, subsequently becoming a member of WEU and NATO. In 1948 Queen Wilhelmina, who had reigned since 1898, abdicated in favour of her daughter, Juliana. The Treaty establishing the Benelux Economic Union between the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg was signed in 1958 and came into force in 1960. The Dutch are among the strongest supporters of European integration, and the Netherlands is a founder member of the EEC. Indonesia, formerly part of the Dutch East Indies, was granted independence in 1949, and in 1963 was given responsibility for Dutch New Guinea. The Netherlands granted independence to Suriname in 1975 and there are plans for the independence of the country's only remaining dependency, the Netherlands Antilles.

All post-war governments have been formed by various coalitions between the several Catholic, Protestant, Socialist and Liberal parties. The general election of April 1971 showed a swing to the left and the new Socialist party joined the Government, which was led by Barend Biesheuvel. In July 1972 the Government was forced to resign after losing its working majority in the Second Chamber. Elections were held in November, in which the "confessional" parties suffered a major setback, and in May 1973 a new Government was formed by a left-of-centre coalition of three "progressive" parties (the Labour Party—PvdA, the Radical Political Party and the Democrats '66) and two "confessional" parties (the Catholic People's Party and the Anti-Revolutionary Party) under Joop den Uyl of the PvdA. This administration made progress towards its principal aim of redistribution of wealth by modifying the fiscal structure and by guaranteeing minimum wage levels for all adult workers. It took a cooler attitude to the EEC's Regional Fund policy and, despite NATO opposition, reduced defence expenditure with a view to tackling more immediate domestic problems.

The coalition collapsed in March 1977 after disagreement over land reform legislation and an election was held in May. Attempts to form a left-of-centre coalition between the PvdA, the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA)—an alliance of "confessional" parties which united to form a single party in 1980—and the Democrats '66 were unsuccessful because of disagreement over a controversial profit-sharing scheme, abortion law reform and the distribution of Ministerial portfolios. In December Andries van Agt (CDA) formed a centre-right coalition government between the CDA and the right-wing People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (Liberals). The new coalition was supported by only 77 of the 150 members of the Second Chamber, and its survival was precarious; in March 1978 the Defence Minister, Roelof Kruisinga, resigned over the possible adoption of the neutron bomb by NATO, and in February 1980 the Finance Minister, Frans Andriessen, resigned over Cabinet disagreement on the scale of spending cuts. Despite censure motions against the siting of NATO cruise missiles and in favour of an oil embargo on South Africa, and a political crisis over the sale of submarines to Taiwan, the Government survived its term of office and a general election was held in May 1981. In September a centre-left coalition was formed by the CDA (now the largest party in the Second Chamber), the PvdA and the Democrats '66, the party which made the greatest election gains, led by Jan Terlouw. The negotiations over the formation of the coalition left many issues of policy undecided, and the Cabinet resigned after only five weeks of office because of its failure to agree on economic strategy. The crisis was resolved at the beginning of November when the coalition accepted the compromise economic programme proposed by two PvdA mediators appointed by Queen Beatrix.

Queen Juliana abdicated in favour of her eldest daughter, Beatrix, in April 1980, following the adoption in February of a constitutional amendment which allowed for the accession of the reigning monarch's eldest child, regardless of sex.

Government

The Netherlands is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy. Legislative power is held by the bicameral States-General. The First Chamber has 75 members indirectly elected for six years (half retiring every three years) by members of the 11 Provincial Councils. The Second Chamber has 150 members directly elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), using proportional representation. The Head of State has mainly formal prerogatives and executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers, led by the Prime Minister, which is responsible to the States-General. The monarch appoints the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. Each of the 11 provinces is administered by an appointed Governor and an elected Council.

Defence

The Netherlands is a member of NATO. Military service is compulsory between the ages of 20 and 35 for a period of between 14 and 17 months. Total strength of the armed forces in July 1981 was 102,800 (1,316 women; 49,300 conscripts), including army 67,000, navy 16,800, air force 19,000, Royal Military Constabulary 3,650, Home Guard 4,300. Defence estimates for 1981 totalled 11,397 million guilders.

Economic Affairs

Since the war the Netherlands has industrialized rapidly and agriculture has been mechanized and developed. The agricultural labour force has dropped from 20 to 6 per cent of the total labour force since 1947. Despite high population density, there is a surplus of agricultural produce made possible by land reclamation, intensive scientific cultivation and co-operative crop distribution. Seed crops, bulbs, horticultural and dairy products account for one-quarter of exports.

About 30 per cent of the working population is employed in industry which, because of the shortage of home-produced raw materials, is mainly processive. Foodstuffs form the largest industrial sector, accounting in 1977 for a quarter of total manufacturing turnover. Other major industries include chemicals, petroleum products, metal-lurgy, machinery and electrical engineering, each of which provides an important share of the export market. The Netherlands has the largest known natural gas reserves in Western Europe, providing more than half of domestic energy requirements and over 7 per cent of export revenue, and in 1980 agreement was reached with European consumers on raising gas prices to bring them into closer alignment with oil prices. Major trading partners are the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Belgium/Luxembourg and the United Kingdom. Amsterdam is the centre for the trade in tobacco, diamonds, precious metals and art treasures.

The worldwide economic recession was felt keenly in the Netherlands in 1975, when real G.N.P. fell by 2 per cent, inflation reached 9.9 per cent and unemployment topped 200,000. In the years 1976-79 the G.N.P. and inflation rates improved, but in 1980 real G.N.P. again fell by 2 per cent, with the chemical industry, textiles and ship-building experiencing checks in growth: shipbuilding was operating at 70 per cent of its 1975 capacity. Inflation rose to 7 per cent from 4.3 per cent the previous year. The level of unemployment did not improve in the intervening years and by September 1981 stood at over 400,000—nearly 10 per cent of the workforce. The balance of trade went into deficit in 1977, and registered a deficit of 7,198 million guilders in 1979, falling to 5,419 million in 1980, and further easing was expected in 1981. The overall balance of payments is in a healthier condition, improving from a deficit of 753 million guilders in 1979 to a surplus of 2,348 million in 1980.

In the face of recession and commitment to a costly social welfare programme, the Government has increased its borrowing and so enlarged the budget deficit. The austerity budget proposed for 1981 was modified in the Second Chamber, so that the ending of index-linked civil salaries was offset by income tax reforms. Another austerity budget was proposed for 1982 by the outgoing administration, but the more left-wing new Cabinet was expected to modify this budget also.

Transport and Communications

A quarter of all freight is carried on inland waterways, of which there are about 4,850 km. There are 2,918 km. of state-operated railways providing mainly passenger services. The Netherlands is one of the world's leading shipping countries. In 1981 the merchant marine had 552 ships. The Rotterdam complex, incorporating the Europoort for mammoth tankers, is the main port of the EEC, and also the busiest port in the world. It handled some 273 million tons of traffic in 1980, and regularly deals with 53 per cent of grain and derivatives and 40 per cent of container traffic passing through north European ports; further development is planned. Royal Dutch Airlines (KLM) is the world's oldest commercial airline. Schiphol, Amsterdam's airport, handles about 340,000 tons of freight and 9.4 million passengers a year. There are 92,525 km. of roads in the Netherlands, of which 1,774 km. are motorways.

Social Welfare

The Netherlands allots an unusually high proportion of its national income, around 35 per cent, to social security. There are five general National Insurance acts covering old-age pensions, widows' and orphans' pensions, children's allowances, disablement pensions and exceptional medical expenses. A further four acts, applicable specifically to workers, cover sickness benefits, health insurance, working incapacity insurance and unemployment benefits. The General Disablement Act of 1967 covers incapacity to work for up to one year, regardless of cause. After this time, compensation is paid (up to 80 per cent of the previous income). Health insurance is compulsory for wage earners, and voluntary for non-wage earners with low incomes. Contributions are made jointly by employer and employee.

Education

There are two types of school in the Netherlands: (1) public schools maintained sometimes by the state, but more frequently by municipalities and attended by about 30 per cent of all school children; (2) private schools which are for the most part denominational and are attended by 70 per cent of the school-going population; they are subsidized by the State often up to 100 per cent. Schools are administered by school boards, responsible to the local authorities or to the private organizations that run them, thus providing teachers with considerable freedom. The Minister of Education and Science is responsible for educational legislation and its enforcement. In matters of general education he is advised by an Education Council made up of university representatives.

Education is compulsory in the Netherlands from 7 to 15. The primary school course lasts six years and is followed by various types of secondary education. (1) Pre-University Schools provide various six-year courses that prepare pupils for university education and in which there is some latitude in choice of subjects taken. (2) General Secondary Education comprises higher and middle secondary schools, providing 5 and 3-4-year courses respectively. It does not prepare for university, though higher secondary schools may be followed by section courses at pre-university schools. (3) Vocational Schools are run on similar lines to the general secondary schools and provide courses in all aspects of secondary and higher technological education. There are eleven universities, three technical universities and seven theological colleges of university standing.

Tourism

The chief attractions are the out-lying islands, the old towns, the canals, the cultivated fields of spring flowers, the art galleries and modern architecture. Concern over the growing deficit on the tourism balance—rising from

Fl. 3,200 million in 1978 to Fl. 4,650 million in 1979—prompted the Government to launch a five-year promotion plan for tourism, beginning in 1980. In 1980 about 2,784,000 tourists stayed in hotels in the Netherlands.

Public Holidays

1982: April 9th (Good Friday), April 12th (Easter Monday), April 30th (Queen's Day), May 20th (Ascension Day), May 31st (Whit Monday), December 25th, 26th (Christmas).

1983: January 1st (New Year).

Coins: 5, 10 and 25 cents; 1, 2.50 and 10 guilders.

100 Netherlands guilders = £21.89 = $40.69.

Note: Between March 1961 and May 1971 the central exchange rate was U.S. $1 = 3.62 guilders (1 guilder = 27.62 U.S. cents). From December 1971 to February 1973 the rate was $1 = 3.2447 guilders (1 guilder = 30.82 U.S. cents). In terms of sterling, the central rate was £1 = 8.688 guilders from November 1967 to May 1971; and £1 = 8.455 guilders from December 1971 to June 1972. Since March 1973 the guilder has been allowed to "float" against the U.S. dollar and sterling. The average exchange rate (guilders per U.S. dollar) was 2.796 in 1973; 2.688 in 1974; 2.529 in 1975; 2.644 in 1976; 2.454 in 1977; 2.164 in 1978; 2.006 in 1979; 1.988 in 1980.

THE CONSTITUTION

(Promulgated 1814; subsequently revised)

THE NETHERLANDS KINGDOM

Under the Constitution the State (the Kingdom) of the Netherlands consists of territories in Europe (the Realm in Europe of the Netherlands) and the overseas territory of the Netherlands Antilles (Suriname, formerly an overseas territory of the Netherlands, gained independence in November 1975). Under the Statute of the Realm signed by Queen Juliana in 1954, the Netherlands, Suriname and the Netherlands Antilles were constituted as a single realm under the House of Orange, thereby ending the former colonial status of Suriname and the Netherlands Antilles.

THE MONARCHY

The Netherlands is a kingdom with responsible and popular government. The Constitution regulates the succession and regency in great detail. When no heir exists, the last Sovereign and a Joint Assembly of the States-General (of a size augmented to double the usual numbers) shall designate the successor, and the Joint Assembly shall act of itself if the Sovereign previously dies. The Council of State shall assume the powers of the Sovereign until such time as an heir shall have been appointed. An amendment made in 1980 allows for the succession of the eldest child, regardless of sex. The age of majority of the Sovereign is 18.

ELECTORAL SYSTEM

All citizens over 18 are eligible to vote.

The Parliamentary Assemblies are called the States-General and consist of two Chambers, a First and a Second Chamber. The Second Chamber is composed of 150 members, and is elected for four years on a system of proportional representation. The First Chamber is composed of 75 members, elected, since 1848, by the Provincial Councils for a term of six years, one-half retiring every three years. All Netherlandsers who have reached the age of 25 are eligible for election to the States-General.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

For all the political actions of the King the ministers are responsible to the States-General. Consequently the power of the Crown (i.e. the King and ministers) to dissolve either or both Chambers is ultimately subject to the judgment of public opinion as interpreted by the States-General and the Cabinet itself. A revision of the Constitution in 1922 made the right of the King to declare war and conclude international agreements (treaties, etc.), dependent upon prior parliamentary sanction. New clauses laying down the conditions under which sovereign powers may be transferred to international organizations, and acknowledging the supremacy of international law, have been included in the Constitution.

The Constitution says nothing about a Prime Minister or a Cabinet: it merely declares that the King establishes ministerial departments, and appoints and dismisses the ministers. Democratic development has enforced upon the Crown the principle that the King shall appoint a Cabinet through the choice of a Cabinet-former, who usually, though not necessarily, will have a majority in Parliament.

Ministers have the right to speak in both Chambers, but not to vote. They are submitted to the questioning and criticism customary in democratic legislatures. The States-General has one ordinary session annually, which normally lasts the whole year, and the King, through the Cabinet, can call others. Legislative power is in the joint authority of the States-General and the Crown (i.e. King and Ministers). The two Chambers must agree on legislation, but while the First Chamber has a power of acceptance or rejection, only the Second Chamber has the power of amendment. The budget, like all common laws, is first presented in the Second Chamber. Revision of the Constitution is possible after two readings in Parliament, and a two-thirds majority on the second reading.

THE COUNCIL OF STATE

There is a Council of State, presided over and appointed by the Sovereign, usually from notable personages, and the Cabinet and King consult this body on legislative and administrative policy, and upon the issue of decrees. The Council is also the highest Court of Appeal in administrative disputes.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The Netherlands consists of eleven provinces*. The administrative organs are the Provincial States, the 'Deputy States' and the Governor of the province. The Provincial States—directly elected, as is the Second Chamber, on a basis of proportional representation—form as it were the Parliament of the provinces. From its members each elects a college of Deputy States to act as Executive Committee of the province. The Governor is the representative of the Crown in the province and is appointed, as well as discharged by the Crown. He is Chairman of the Provincial and Deputy States. By virtue of the Constitution, the Provincial States have the right of making their own decisions on measures in the interest of the province.

The municipalities (about 840 in number)—each governed by a burgomaster (also appointed by the Crown), assisted by aldermen (chosen from and by the Council) and the Council elected by the local inhabitants—have the right to make local regulations.

* The Government plans to create additional provinces by dividing the most densely populated.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

De Hoge Raad der Nederlanden (The Supreme Court of the Netherlands): The Hague; f. 1838. For appeals in cassation against decisions of courts of lower jurisdiction. As a court of first instance the Supreme Court tries offences committed in their official capacity by members of the States-General, Ministers and some other high officers. Dealing with appeals in cassation a court is composed of five justices (raadsheren). Pres. Supreme Court CH. M. J. A. MOONS; Procurator-Gen. W. J. M. BERGER; Sec. of the Court W. J. C. M. VAN NISSEN TOT SEVENAER.

Gerechtshoven (Courts of Appeal): 5 courts: Amsterdam, Arnhem, 's-Hertogenbosch, Leeuwarden, The Hague. A court is composed of three judges (raadsheren); appeal is from decisions of the District Courts of Justice. Fiscal Divisions (Belastingkamers) of the Courts of Appeal deal with appeals against decisions relating to the enforcement of the fiscal laws (administrative jurisdiction). The court at Arnhem has a Tenancy Division (Pachtkamer) composed of three judges and two assessors (a tenant and a landlord) and a Penitentiary Division composed of two assessors. The Tenancy Division hears appeals from decisions of all Canton Tenancy Divisions. The Penitentiary Division hears appeals against refusals of release on license, which is usually granted after two-thirds of a prison sentence longer than one year, unless there are special objections from the Minister of Justice. A Companies Division (Ondernemingskamer) is attached to the court at Amsterdam, consisting of three judges and two experts as assessors.

Arrondissementsrechtbanken (District Courts of Justice): 19 courts for important civil and penal cases and for appeals from decisions of the Canton Judges. A court is composed of three judges (rechter); no jury; summary jurisdiction in civil cases by the President of the Court; simple penal cases, including economic offences, generally by a single judge (Politierechter). Offences committed by juveniles are (with certain exceptions) tried by a specialized judge (Kinderrechter), who is also competent to take certain legal steps when the up-bringing of a juvenile is endangered.

Kantongerechten (Canton Courts): 62 courts for civil and penal cases of minor importance. A court consists of a single judge, the Canton Judge (Kantonrechter). Each Canton Court has a Tenancy Division (Pachtkamer), presided over by the Canton Judge who is assisted by two assessors (a landlord and a tenant).

Justices and judges must have graduated in law at a Dutch university, and are nominated for life by the Crown. The justices of the Supreme Court are nominated from a list of three compiled by the Second Chamber of the States-General.

ADMINISTRATIVE JURISDICTION

Ambtenarengerechten (Civil Service Courts): 10 courts for civil service arbitration. The Civil Service Court at The Hague also acts as Military Service Court for military service arbitration, and hears appeals against decisions on pensions for ex-civil and military servants.

Raden van Beroep (Appeal Councils): 10 courts to hear appeals against decisions enforcing social insurance legislation.

Centrale Raad van Beroep (Central Appeal Council): Utrecht; tries in supreme instance appeals against decisions of the Appeal Councils and the Civil Service Courts.

College van Beroep voor het Bedrijfsleven (Board of Appeal for Trade and Industry): Hears in first and last instances appeals against decisions enforcing social-economic legislation.

Afdeling Rechtspraak van de Raad van State (Judicial Section of the Council of State): Hears appeals from private persons against administrative decisions.

THE PRESS

Newspapers appeared in the Netherlands as early as 1618 in Amsterdam and they soon flourished there and spread to other cities. The constitution guarantees the freedom of the press, but Netherlands law does not recognize the right to reply nor the right of a journalist to protect his source of information.

There are eight dailies which circulate throughout the country and about 80 provincial newspapers. A few papers appear in several different regional versions. A distinguishing feature of the Dutch press is that it is aimed at the family and most of the papers are read in the home. Most of the papers appear only in the evening, though the trend towards morning editions is growing, and nearly all of the total circulation is sold by subscription. There is practically no sensational press. Although most of the papers are officially independent, the remainder have some definite political bias.

In spite of the large circulation much important revenue from advertising has been lost since 1968 to radio and television and many papers have been in financial difficulties resulting in several mergers and liquidations in recent years.

RADIO AND TELEVISION

Nederlandse Omroep Stichting (NOS) (Netherlands Broadcasting Corporation): P.O.B. 10, 1200 JB Hilversum; f. 1969; Chair. E. C. M. JURGENSE.

Radio and television programmes in the Netherlands are broadcast by numerous organizations. The purpose of the NOS is to co-ordinate them all as well as transmitting programmes in its own right (using about 25 per cent of television time and about 15 per cent of radio time). The NOS provides technical facilities and central archives, and is responsible for orchestras and choirs, a repertory company, and other services which are available to all broadcasting organizations. The Management Board of the NOS consists of 33 members, half of whom are representatives of the main broadcasting organizations, while a quarter are appointed by the Crown and a quarter by cultural and social bodies.

The eight associate companies, listed below, retain individual autonomy in planning their programmes; the amount of transmission time allotted to each company varies according to the number of subscribers. In addition, other organizations, such as churches, political parties and educational bodies, are allocated transmission time. Advertising was first permitted in 1967 and is supplied for both radio and television by Stichting Ether Reclame (STER). Colour television started in 1967.

At January 1st, 1981 there were 4,181,000 television licences registered.

LAND RECLAMATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Ministry of Transport, Water Control and Public Works: The Hague, Plesmanweg 1-6; is the authority responsible for land reclamation and waterways.

Without intensive land protection schemes nearly the whole of the north and west of the Netherlands (about half of the total area of the country) would be inundated by sea-water twice a day. A large part of the country (as, for example, part of the former Zuiderzee, now the IJsselmeer) has already been drained.

The Delta Plan, which was accepted by Parliament in 1958, will shorten the southern coastline by 435 miles and protect the estuaries of Zeeland and Southern Holland. The Scheme consists of 4 closing dams across the mouths of the estuary, 3 of which have been completed. The remaining dam in the Eastern Scheldt is to be finished in 1985. In addition there is a barrier further inland in the mouth of the Hollandse IJssel to prevent the very high tides from penetrating inland. There are also 3 regulating dams and 2 more under construction which are also due for completion in 1985.

The total cost of the delta works, originally estimated at 2,500 million guilders, will be about 10,000 million guilders, as the result of a complex adaptation of the closing dam in the Eastern Scheldt.

TRANSPORT

Nederlandse Spoorwegen: Moreelsepark 1, Utrecht; f. 1937; length of lines 2,918 km.; Pres. and Chief Exec. L. F. PLOEGER.

All railway lines in the Netherlands are operated by the Nederlandse Spoorwegen, a limited liability company of which the State is the sole shareholder. Most of the Dutch railway network is electrified; the remaining track carries diesel electric stock.
